though if he should go thither he could not be removed; it may be a great injury to send him away from a good trade at Hinton Blewet to perhaps half an acre of land wherein he has but a term."

2. OF REMOVAL OF THE WIFE.

Rex v. Aythorp Rooding, Burr. S. C. 412; 2 Bott, 104. William Gates, husband of the pauper, Susannah Gates, being settled at White Rooding, went away and left his wife and children. Whereupon she and her children went and lived for forty days, without her husband, in a copyhold tenement of her husband's at Aythorp Rooding. She was removed to White Rooding. Order quashed. By the court: "There doth not appear any dissent of her husband from her going there, and therefore it is rather to be presumed that she went with his consent. The husband's settlement remains as it was, but nevertheless the wife was not removable from his estate. It is one thing to say, that a person may not be removed; and another, that such person doth not gain a settlement. The husband himself would not have been removable from his own if he had gone thither. A man's right to reside upon his own estate is founded on Magna Charta, which says, that a man shall not be disseised of his freehold. A wife hath a natural right to go and reside upon her husband's estate. If she had gone against her husband's consent, it would have made an alteration." And the court were unanimous that the justices could not remove her from her husband's property.

Rex v. Leeds, Burr. S. C. 524; 1 Bla. Rep. 466. Joseph Howe, husband of Anne Howe, the pauper, took a tenement of 10*l.* a year at Blackfordby, and resided there above forty days. Afterwards he took a tenement at Leeds of above 10*l.* a year, and went and resided there for above forty days, leaving his wife at Blackfordby. Then he returned to Blackfordby, and stayed with his wife there twenty-seven days. And on his leaving her and going away to Leeds, she was removed from Blackfordby to Leeds, as to her place of settlement. Order confirmed. It was agreed, that her settlement must follow that of her husband; but the court were of opinion that the justices had no power to remove her from Blackfordby whilst her husband's interest there subsisted. The husband himself could not have been removed from his own tenement at Blackfordby, the lease whereof was unexpired. And if they could not have removed the man himself from his own, it follows, that they could not remove his wife so long as it remained his. Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Brington, 7 B. & C. 546; 1 M. & R. 431; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 122. Order of removal of Maria Chambers, wife of Edward Chambers, a convict at Van Diemen's Land, and their daughter, Mary Elliott, from Brington to Badby, quashed. Case:—John Elliot, by a marriage settlement in January, 1772, settled a messuage in Little Brington, and about twenty acres of land, in trust to himself for life, and remainder to his wife; and after other remainders, remainder to the first son and his heirs, remainder to the second and every other son, remainder to the use of the daughters of the said John on the body of Mary, and the heirs of their bodies, as tenants in common. They had four sons and eight daughters, all of whom died without issue in the lifetime of their mother, except four daughters, viz. Elizabeth, Alice, Maria, and Sophia, who survived her. Maria, the pauper, married Edward Chambers, whose legal settlement is now in Badby, where she was living until February, 1826, (her husband being at that time, and continuing at the date of the order of removal, absent from England,) when she went to Brington, the parish in which the property lies, to her sister, who lives in the house mentioned in the settlement, and resided there thirteen weeks, until she was removed to Badby. Bayley, J. "The question is not as to the place where the wife is settled; that, without doubt, is in her husband's parish, Badby. This is a case where the party goes to her own estate, of which she has a seisin: the husband had not sole seisin, for when an estate in fee comes to a feme covert, the interest of the husband and wife is a seisin in fee, and both in right of the wife. (Polyblank v. Hawkins, Doug. 329.) Rex v. Aythorp Rooding (ante, 828,) is not so strong a case as the present: there the property was the husband's, while here it is the property of the wife, descendable to her heirs. There is no distinction between a sole occupation and an occupation in coparcenary. Although no partition had been made, the wife had a right to say that she would occupy her part, and not suffer other persons to occupy it. And there might be good reason for it here; as, by the husband's absence abroad, it might have been difficult to collect the profits without residence. The pauper, therefore, is irremovable, although she could not have gained any settlement by her residence in Brington."

Rex v. Matlock, 1 Adol. & Ell. 124. Appeal against an order of justices removing G. Arnalt and his wife from Wirksworth to Matlock. Order confirmed. Case:—It was admitted on both sides that the pauper, George Arnalt, was legally settled in Matlock, and was removable thither, unless the power to remove him from Wirksworth was negatived by the following facts. The pauper, George Arnalt, being a married man, went to live with his father in a cottage built on the waste in Wirksworth; his father paid sevenpence a year rent to the Duchy of Lancaster for the cottage, and the pauper continued to pay the rent after his father's death until about nineteen or twenty years ago, when all the cottages belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster were sold, and the pauper purchased his cottage for 5*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, and it was conveyed to him. In 1827 the pauper sold the cottage to a person named Wilson for 40*l.*, and Wilson at the same time demised it to the pauper and his wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them at a rent of 40*s.* a year. At Christmas, 1831, Wilson demanded a year's rent of the pauper, which he was unable to pay, and Wilson then took possession of the cottage. The pauper denied that there was any power of re-entry in the case of non-payment of rent. A lodger as well as the pauper's furniture remained in the house after he quitted it. About the same time that this transaction happened, the pauper applied to the overseer of Wirksworth for relief, but the overseer refused to relieve him until the lease was destroyed, and Wilson also called upon the pauper and told him that if he and his wife would consent to give up the lease, they should have 5*s.* a week instead of 2*s.* 6*d.*, and should not be disturbed during their lives. The pauper finally agreed that the lease should be destroyed, and Wilson brought it to an inn in Wirksworth, where it was destroyed in the presence of many persons, the pauper himself assisting to destroy it. It did not appear on the trial of the appeal that the pauper's wife was present when the lease was destroyed, or that she afterwards gave her consent to its being so disposed of. Wilson told the pauper that he should not be disturbed, but on his applying for relief, he was informed that unless he went into the workhouse he could not be relieved. He and his wife accordingly went into the workhouse and remained there for a fortnight or three weeks, when they were removed to the appellant parish pursuant to the order of removal. Per Curiam: "The order must be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

St. Michael's, Bath, v. Nunny, 1 Stra. 544. Order of removal of the wife of a poor person. It was moved to quash the order, because it did not appear the husband was at the time of the removal in St. Michael's, so that it might be they sent the wife away from the husband. But by the court: "We cannot intend he was not; if he were in the parish from which she was sent, that indeed would vitiate the order; for the wife cannot be removed from her husband: but as neither of these facts appear against the order, to satisfy us that it is bad, we are not to presume it to be so; and therefore it must be confirmed."

Rex v. Stockton, 2 Nev. & M. 353; 5 B. & Ad. 546. Appeal against an order of removal of F. Carstofen and her three children from Stockton to Spalding. Order reversed. Case:—On the 2d of May, 1832, Robert Carstofen, who is a native of Scotland, without settlement in England, and a lunatic, returned

A house in the parish of W. was let to A. and B. his wife, for their joint lives and the life of the survivor. A. and B. were ejected wrongfully from the house, but their furniture and a person who had lodged with them remained in the house. Afterwards A. assisted the lessor to destroy the lease: Held, that after these transactions A. and B. continued irremovable from W. though they had become actually chargeable.

The wife cannot be removed without the husband, if he is in the parish. (a) a lunatic and having no settlement: Held, that the order was not void on the ground that it would effect the separation of husband and wife, because it was not to be presumed that when it was made, the husband was residing in parish A. or was not residing in parish B.

from Sunderland in Durham, where he had for some time been residing, to Stockton, accompanied by his wife and her three children. Almost immediately on their arrival in that township they applied to the assistant overseer for relief, and on the 2d and 3d of that month were relieved by him and ordered to quit the town and return to Sunderland. About the 19th of May the wife again applied to the Stockton overseers for relief, whereupon she and her three children were removed to the parish of Spalding by an order of justices, which stated, that upon complaint "that Frances Carstofen, the wife of Robert Carstofen, a Scotchman, having no settlement in England, and who is a lunatic, and her three children (therein described) had come to inhabit in Stockton, not having gained a settlement there, nor producing any certificate owning them to be settled elsewhere, and that they had become chargeable to the said township of Stockton;" they the said justices upon due proof did adjudge the same to be true, and likewise adjudged "that the lawful settlement of her the said Frances Carstofen and her three children is in the parish of Spalding;" they therefore required the churchwardens and overseers of Stockton to convey her and her three children from Stockton to Spalding. The parish of Spalding appealed against this order, and to bring the question before the court the following admissions were made. That the maiden settlement of F. C. is in the parish of Spalding, and that she was legally married to Robert Carstofen, and that the three children named in the said order are legitimate, that the said R. C. was born in Scotland, that he has not gained any settlement in England, and that he was a lunatic and living at the date of the order of removal. On the hearing, an objection was taken to the form of the order, and the court of quarter sessions quashed the same on the ground that it was bad on the face of it, as it did not contain any statement of the desertion of the wife by the husband, that the defect was in a matter of substance, which the court had not power to remedy, and that evidence could not be received for the purpose of amending the order. The township of Stockton tendered evidence for this purpose, and offered to show that the husband was not living with his wife nor in the township of Stockton at the time of the wife's application for relief, and the order of removal being made, but that he had escaped from his family in a fit of lunacy on the preceding 4th of May, when they were all in the parish of Thirsk, in Yorkshire. If this court should be of opinion that the order was bad on the face of it, and not amendable, the order of sessions was to be confirmed, otherwise to be quashed. Denman, C. J. "The authorities cited, show that the court will not presume any fact in order to vitiate an order of removal. Here it is perfectly consistent with that order, that it may not have the effect of separating husband and wife, for the husband and wife may not have been living together at the time when that order was made, or he may be living at Spalding, the parish to which she is ordered to be removed." Parke, J. "This case falls within St. Michael, Bath, v. Nunny (1 Str. 544, Burr. S. C. 815, ante, 829). We cannot intend that when the order was made, the husband of the pauper was residing at Stockton, or that he was not at Spalding." Taunton and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

To make such removal invalid, it must appear that the husband was resident with the wife at the time of her removal.

Rex v. Ironacton, Burr. S. C. 153; 2 Bott, 111. Mary, the wife of William King, removed to Ironacton, the settlement of her husband. Order confirmed. It was objected that the wife was removed without the husband. But the court over-ruled the objection; for how doth it appear that the husband was not at Ironacton at that time? The court will not suppose it to be wrong, unless it appears so. The intrusion complained of was only by the wife, and they could not remove the husband when he was not complained of.

If a wife be removed (eo nomine) to the place of her legal settlement, it is good.

Rex v. Higher Walton, Burr. S. C. 162; 2 Bott, 112. Order of removal of Mary Bennet, wife of Samuel Bennet, to Higher Walton, the place of her settlement, confirmed. It was urged that it did not appear whether it were this woman's settlement in her own right, or in the right of her husband, and nothing shall be intended. Now if it were not her settlement in right of her husband, the justices had no power to send her thither. By the court: "It is adjudged to be her last legal settlement; and she could not be settled but where her husband was; and we are not to intend any thing to vitiate the order. Therefore we cannot intend that the husband's settlement was not at Higher Walton." Motion denied.

Rex v. Yspytty, 4 M. & Sel. 52. Order of removal of Ann Williams from Llandyrnog to Yspytty confirmed. Case:—The pauper is the wife of Griffith Williams, a soldier in his Majesty's service at Woolwich. The mother of the husband proved that he gained a settlement about eleven years ago in Yspytty. This was the only evidence of the settlement of the husband or of the pauper, and no attested copy was produced of the husband's examination upon oath, pursuant to 54 Geo. III. c. 25, s. 69. The order was for the removal of Ann Williams (not stating her to be the wife of any one), Jane her daughter, aged three years, and Griffith her son, aged two years; adjudging that their settlement (not that the settlement of her husband) was in Yspytty. Rex v. Bucklebury (1 T. R. 164, post, 835,) was cited to show that the order was well enough in point of form, although it did not state that Yspytty was the settlement of the husband. Contra. "The evidence of the mother to prove the settlement of the son, when it appeared the son himself might have been called to prove it, was not the best evidence." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If the respondent parish prove enough to launch a prima facie case of settlement, is it necessary they should prove more? Must they go on to call witnesses at the hazard of having that which is already proved defeated? As to the objection upon the form of the order, it is stated that it is the wife's settlement, and the medium through which she became settled there need not be stated." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Carleton, Burr S. C. 813. Johanna, wife of Simon Mac Owen, and their four children, removed from Hoylandswain to Carleton, stating in their order that complaint was made, that Simon Mac Owen, Johanna his wife, and children, came to inhabit in Hoylandswain, not having gained a settlement there; and that Simon was an Irishman, and had done no act in England to gain a legal settlement, and that his wife and children were chargeable to Hoylandswain; which they adjudged to be true, and that the settlement of Johanna and children was in Carleton; and therefore they removed them thither. Order confirmed. Case:—John Tyas, father of Johanna, in 1727, came with a certificate from Carleton to reside in Hoylandswain, and during his residence there, Johanna was born, and continued to live with him there until she was upwards of twenty-one years of age: she afterwards took a house at Hoylandswain, and resided therein till she was married to Simon, who upon his marriage went to reside with Johanna in her house, and continued to reside with her from the time of their marriage in 1766, until she and her children were removed under this order from the said Simon, and from his dwelling-house wherein he then and still continues to reside; Simon maintained himself and family until a little time before the removal was made. It was objected that this would occasion a separation between husband and wife; and amount in effect to a divorce. And the court were clear that the removal was wrong. It was not like the case of the husband being dead, or having left his wife. Here the husband was alive; resided at Hoylandswain; followed the business of a cloth-dresser there; and maintained his family by it for many years, till they were taken ill of this temporary fever, which obliged them to apply for relief. The parish had had the benefit of his labour nine years. This man was settled in a house and carried on business in this place. There might be no business for a cloth-dresser at Carleton at all. Or this man might have no acquaintance there. He might starve there though he could maintain his family at Hoylandswain. Orders quashed.

Rex v. Hinxworth, Doug. 46 (n. 13.); Cald. 42; 2 Bott, 115. Sarah, called in the order "the wife" of Joseph Griffin, was removed from Cheshunt to Hinxworth in the husband's absence, and without having examined him. The order was not appealed against. The husband soon after went

2. Removal of the Wife.

An order for the removal of a married woman (not stating her to be such) and her children to Y., adjudging that the lawful settlement of her and her children is in Y., was held well, without adjudging that Y. was her husband's settlement; and proof by the mother of the husband that he gained a settlement in Y., by hiring and service, was held sufficient, without calling the husband.

The wife and children of an Irishman could not, when they became chargeable, be removed from him to the wife's parish. (a)

Removal of a woman, as the wife of J. G., to C., is good, for it will be presumed that C. is the husband's settlement.

(a) See Rex v. Leeds (ante, 97), and Rex v. Cottingham (ante, 99); as to the removal of the wife of an Irishman or Scotchman, post.

to his wife and children at Hinxworth, from whence they were all sent back under a new order to Cheshunt. Cheshunt appealed against this order, and producing the former order, insisted it was conclusive as to the husband as well as the wife and children. The sessions, however, after hearing evidence as to Griffin's settlement, confirmed the new order as to him, and quashed it as to the wife and children. The wife then went back with her children to her husband at Cheshunt. After which a third order was made, removing the children again to Cheshunt. This was likewise appealed against, and confirmed as to all but two of the children, who were under seven years of age, as to whom it was quashed. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There is nothing in this case. It is admitted that if they had put into the first order, that it was the husband's settlement, that would have been conclusive; and the omission makes no difference. The general rule is, that the husband's settlement is the settlement of the wife. There are some special exemptions; as where the husband is beyond sea. But the presumption is in favour of the general rule; and if this had been the case of an exception, it ought to have been stated." And the rule was made absolute to quash all the orders but the first.

If the husband return after the wife has been removed, and that order of removal is quashed, they cannot be removed together to the place of the former removal.

The wife may be removed without her husband (he having no settlement) if they consent.

Rex v. Leigh, Doug. 46; Cald. 59; 2 Bott, 116. Order of removal of a married woman from Ewell to Leigh, in the absence of the husband, quashed. The husband afterwards returning to Ewell with his wife, they were removed under a new order to Leigh, which was confirmed; but it was given up as not to be supported, since Rex v. Hinxworth (ante, 831.)

Rex v. Eltham, 5 East, 113. An order made on examination of the husband, and with the consent of him and his wife, removed Mary, wife of Peter Finn, a Scotchman, who never gained a settlement in England, and children, from St. George the Martyr, to Eltham. There was an appeal, which was dismissed without a case; and both these orders being removed by certiorari, it was objected that the wife was removed by such order from her husband, who was still living, and probably in the very parish whence she and her children were removed, and whose assent to their separation, even if it could be presumed in favour of the order, was invalid. In St. Michael's v. Nunney (ante, 829), the court said, that if the husband were in the parish whence the wife was sent, it would vitiate the order: now that fact is to be collected in this case; for he is stated to have been examined before the magistrates, and to have given his consent to the removal. But by Lawrence, J. "How does it appear that the husband was living in St. George the Martyr? He might have been before the magistrates without residing there. The order only states, that the wife and children were come to inhabit in that parish." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Independent of the mentioned objection, what doubt is there in the case? A Scotchman, who has no settlement of his own, and is desirous to give his wife and children the benefit of hers, being unable to maintain them, consents that she should be sent to her parish, to which she herself is willing to go. Why should he not consent? This is nothing like the contract of separation declared to be illegal in Marshall v. Rutton (8 T. R. 545). Servants, and other persons of that description, members of the same family, who are to subsist by their labour, must frequently separate for that purpose. Here there is neither a private nor a public injury." The court affirmed the orders. (a)

And the wife of an Irishman, who has no settlement in England, may, if deserted by him, be removed to her maiden settlement. (See Rex v. Cottingham, 7 B. & C. 615, ante, 99.)

A married woman pregnant of a child, which will be a bastard, is removable, if the husband be abroad, as an unmarried woman with child.

Rex v. Tibbenham, 9 East, 388. Upon complaint of the parish officers of Diss, in Norfolk, that Rebecca Knowles, wife of John Knowles, lately came to inhabit in Diss, not having gained a legal settlement there; "and that the said R. K. is actually become chargeable to the said parish of Diss," two justices, "upon due proof, &c. &c. adjudged the same to be true," and adjudged the lawful settlement of the said R. to be in Tibbenham, &c.

(a) This case, as far as it regards Scotchmen, is no longer an authority. (See Rex v. Leeds, ante, 97.)

&c. This order was confirmed by the sessions, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following case: the pauper's husband, John Knowles, being settled at T., had gone to the East Indies four years before, and had never returned. At the time of the removal the pauper was residing in Diss, and pregnant of a child, which was afterwards born a bastard in T. The pauper never received any relief from Diss parish, nor was chargeable in any other manner than as above mentioned. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The first question is, whether a married woman, who, in the absence of her husband abroad, is pregnant under such circumstances as that the child, when born, would be deemed by law a bastard, be liable to be removed under the 35 Geo. III.? The act indeed says, "that every unmarried woman with child shall be deemed and taken to be a person actually chargeable within the true intent and meaning of the act," and removable: but the legislature plainly had in view that every woman pregnant of a child, which was not protected by the matrimony of its parents, but would, when born, be a bastard, should be removable, whether married or unmarried; for though the mother were married, yet if her child would by law be a bastard, she was in pari jure within the scope of this act with an unmarried woman who was pregnant. The next question is, whether the order of removal be good in the form of it? It states the complaint of the parish officers of Diss, that Rebecca, the wife of John Knowles, is actually become chargeable to their parish, &c.; and the justices, upon due proof made thereof, adjudge the same to be true. The act says, that a woman under the circumstances I have stated, 'shall be deemed and taken to be a person actually chargeable,' &c. Have not then the justices done enough in stating that the pauper was 'actually become chargeable to the parish?' They are to draw the conclusion whether chargeable or not, and it is enough for them to state that conclusion upon the face of the order, without stating the premises upon which it was founded. If that conclusion be disputed the party is to appeal; and such appeal having been made, and the facts stated to us, it is to be seen, thirdly, whether the premises warranted the magistrates in drawing that conclusion. The legislature intended that an unmarried woman, or, what is the same for this purpose, a married woman, under the circumstances I have mentioned, being with child, is prima facie chargeable within the law: it raises a presumption of her being chargeable. But I say again, as I said in Rex v. Alveley (post, 837), that if it appears that the woman is a person of substance, and that there is no pretence to say that she is likely to bring a burden upon the parish, the act did not intend to make such a person liable to be removed. But it is made a presumptive chargeability, so as to put it on the party disputing it to show that she is a person of substance, or, as in Rex v. Alveley (post, 837), a person under a contract of hiring and service with another at the time, so as to rebut the presumption. The only cases that materially affect the construction of the clause in question are, first, Rex v. St. Mary, Westport (3 T. R. 44, ante, 807), which was the case of a certificated person, who, under the statute 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, was not removable till actually chargeable: and it was held, that one of the family of the certificated person being pregnant of a child likely to be born a bastard, was not removable under that act. The question was again made in Rex v. Great Yarmouth (8 T. R. 68, post, 839), after the passing of the 35 Geo. III., where the residence of a person so circumstanced under a certificate was held to be no objection to her removal. Then came Rex v. Alveley (post, 837), where the principal point decided was, that a single woman being with child did not operate such a dissolution of the contract of hiring and service, as to make her removable against the consent of herself and her master. In that case there is one observation attributed to me which I am not prepared to abide by; viz. that where the act says such a person may be removed, it does not say that she shall be so. Now I do not think that the use of the word may there, as contradistinguished from shall, makes any difference in the sense. If the party come within the true intent and meaning of the clause as there described, I think the true meaning of the words 'may be removed,' is, that she 'shall be removed.' All the statutes respecting the Otherwise, if it appear that she is a woman of substance, and not likely to bring a burden upon the parish.

2. Removal of the Wife.

removal of the poor form together one system of law, and it is a condition precedent, if I may so say, that the persons to be subjected to their operation should be in the condition of poverty. When therefore the clause in question says that an unmarried woman with child shall be deemed to be actually chargeable, &c., for the purpose of subjecting them to be removed, it means that persons so situated shall, prima facie, only be deemed to be chargeable, and it still leaves it open to show that the party is of substance, so as not to be within the scope and view of the poor laws. Therefore, whether in the form of the order it be said that the woman so circumstanced is deemed to be chargeable, or is therefore chargeable, or that she is chargeable, it is all alike and equally good: and she must be presumed to be in the situation in which she is considered by the legislature: viz. as actually chargeable to the parish where she is inhabiting, and consequently liable to be removed, unless the contrary be shown. Here then it is sufficiently adjudged in the order that the pauper was actually chargeable, so as to make her removable under the act; and it appearing by the facts stated on the appeal that though married, yet that her husband was abroad, and could not have been the father of her child, this was a prima facie case to bring her within the sixth clause, and to show that she was actually chargeable within the meaning of the act; and nothing being shown to rebut that presumption, it remains presumptively established that the pauper was within the description of persons liable to be removed." The other judges agreed, and both orders were confirmed.

An order of removal made upon complaint that M. S., the wife of W. S., who is absent from her, is come to inhabit, &c., and is now with child, which is likely to be born a bastard, adjudging the said M. S. to be actually chargeable, was held sufficient.

Rex v. Inskip-with-Sowerby, 5 M. & Sel. 299. Margaret Sykes was removed from Inskip-with-Sowerby to Pilling; and the order stated that Margaret Sykes, the wife of William Sykes, a soldier in the army, and absent from her, is to come to inhabit in Inskip-with-Sowerby, that she is now with child, which is likely to be born a bastard, and that her last legal settlement is in the township of Pilling; and the justices, upon due proof made thereof, and likewise upon due consideration had of the premises, did adjudge the said M. S. to be actually chargeable to Inskip-with-Sowerby, and her settlement to be in Pilling. And then it proceeded to order her removal. The sessions quashed the order for insufficiency of form, because it was not stated in the complaint that the pauper was become actually chargeable. The court, without hearing argument, were of opinion that the order of removal was sufficient; for the complaint states the premises from whence the conclusion necessarily arose under the act of parliament (35 Geo. III. c. 101), that the pauper was to be deemed chargeable, and the justices have drawn the conclusion. (See Rex v. Amphill, ante, 827, and Rex v. Stockton, 2 Nev. & M. 353; 5 B. & Ad. 546, ante, 829.)

A wife cannot be removed to her maiden settlement if the husband has a settlement in some other parish, although that parish cannot be ascertained,

Rex v. St. Mary, Beverley, 1 B. & Adol. 201. Harriet, the wife of William Owen, and their children, were removed from St. Martin, in Beverley, to St. Mary, in Beverley. Order confirmed. Case:—The maiden settlement of Harriet, the wife of William Owen, was in St. Mary, and both his children were born there. No proof was offered that W. Owen had gained a settlement in his own right; but, on the part of the respondents, Ann Rogers, the mother of W. Owen, deposed that she was the wife of a serjeant in the 30th regiment of foot; that she never heard or knew where his place of settlement was; that about twenty-seven years since, whilst the regiment was on the march, she was suddenly taken in labour upon a baggage-waggon; that her son, W. Owen, (the husband of Harriet), was born in the stable of an inn at Ipswich; that she never was in Ipswich before, nor had she ever been there since; that there were several parishes in Ipswich, but that she did not know in which parish the stable was situate, or to what it belonged; and that even if she was now in Ipswich, she could not point out the stable or inn where she was confined. No proof was given of any other endeavour having been made on the part of the respondents to ascertain the parish in which W. Owen was born. At the time of making the order of removal, W. Owen was living with his wife and family in St. Martin, in Beverley. The husband, W. Owen, gave his consent to the removal of his wife and family to St. Mary, in Beverley, but no proof was given of any consent on the part of Harriet Owen to her removal. The question was, whether Harriet Owen and her children could be removed to the place of her maiden settlement? Bayley, J., "We are of opinion that both the orders in this case ought to be quashed. To justify the confirmation of an order of removal, it ought to appear upon the evidence adduced by the respondents, that the party removed is settled in the parish to which the removal is made; if that do not appear, and à fortiori, if the contrary appear, the removal cannot be supported. Now the evidence in this case does not prove that the person removed is settled in the parish of St. Mary, to which she is removed, but in one of the parishes in Ipswich. It is argued, however, that as the respondent's witness did not know in which of the parishes in Ipswich the settlement was, and had proved a maiden settlement in the appellant parish of the wife who was removed, the onus of proving in which of the parishes in Ipswich the husband was born was upon the appellant parish, and that in the absence of such proof, a removal to the wife's maiden settlement was warrantable. We do not concur in this reasoning. Where the respondent's evidence makes out a maiden settlement, and contains nothing to show that any subsequent settlement which would supersede the maiden settlement has been gained, that constitutes a prima facie case, and the onus of proof that the pauper was not settled there lies upon the appellants, but not that of proving the precise place where the pauper was settled. It is enough to disprove, by clear evidence, the obligation of the appellant parish to maintain the pauper; and the question may be considered for this purpose as being in substance the same as if there were an issue to be tried between the two parishes, whether the pauper was settled in the parish of St. Mary or not. None of the cases cited in argument go any thing like the length for which the respondents must contend. In Rex v. Woodford (ante, 316), there was no proof of any settlement but the maiden settlement of the wife. The same was the case in Rex v. Harberton (13 East, 312). In Rex v. Hensingham, (2 Bott, 85,) there was indeed proof that the husband had told his wife that he was born in Yorkshire, but what a man says as to the place of his birth is not receivable in evidence to prove it; and a similar observation applies to Rex v. Westerham (ante, 316). The only remaining case cited by the respondents was that of Rex v. Eltham (ante, 832), where the husband was a Scotchman, and had no settlement of his own. I am not aware of any other case in favour of the respondents. Now what do these cases prove? They prove, at the utmost, that where there is no sufficient evidence of any settlement in the husband, and where the only settlement as to which there is any is the wife's maiden settlement, the wife may be removed to that settlement; but they do not bear upon the point where it appears upon the evidence that there is a settlement in the husband. Upon the ground, therefore, that in this case it appears, upon the respondent's evidence, that the husband has a settlement in a parish at Ipswich, we are of opinion that a removal to the wife's maiden settlement cannot be supported, and that the order of sessions ought to be quashed." Order of sessions quashed. (See this case also ante.)

2. Removal of the Wife.

3. REMOVAL OF CHILDREN.

Bucklebury v. Bradfield, 1 T. R. 164. Elizabeth, aged five, John, aged two years and a half, and Sarah Knott, aged one year and a half, were removed from Bucklebury to Bradfield. The order set forth the ages of the paupers, and that upon due proof made thereof, as well upon the examination of Elizabeth Knott, their grandmother, upon oath, as otherwise (and so on in the usual form.) Order quashed. Case:—Charles Knott went to Twickenham in 1777, where he married Sarah Slade, who dying in 1784, Charles brought the paupers to Elizabeth, his mother, who was living at Bucklebury in 1785, and told her they were his children, and desired her to take care of them, and he would send money for their maintenance; the paupers remained with Elizabeth about fourteen weeks, but she not receiving any money from her son, and being unable to maintain them, they were removed to Bradfield, who appealed, and Charles was subpoenaed, but did not appear.

3. Of Removal of Children.

Removing nurse children to the settlement of their parents. The order is good, though it takes no notice of the death, nor adjudges the place to which they are removed.

3. Removal of Children.

The appeal was adjourned at the next sessions; he not appearing, the appeal was not heard, but adjourned, when the appeal was heard, and the removants proceeded to support the order by the following evidence: David Knott, the paternal grandfather, had his settlement in Bradfield, and his son Charles was born there. It did not appear whether Charles had gained any settlement subsequent to his derivative settlement, nor was any evidence given to identify the paupers to be the children of Charles and Sarah Knott, except as above. In support of the order it was urged, that the paupers being nurse children, ought not to have been removed without their father or mother, unless the order had stated they were dead, otherwise the children might be settled in a different parish from their parents. Another objection was, that the order was grounded on the examination of the grandmother, and not on that of the father. And there was no evidence produced at the sessions but the grandmother to identify those children, or that the father had not gained a subsequent settlement. The other side was stopped by the court, who were clearly of opinion that there was no objection to the competency of this evidence; and as to the other point, that it was incumbent on the parish of Bradfield to have shown that the father had gained a subsequent settlement. Order of sessions quashed.

In Rex v. Brington, 1 M. & R. 431; 7 B. & C. 549, (ante, 828,) the Court of King's Bench presumed that the sessions had quashed the order as to the child that had been removed with its mother, as being within the age of nurture.

Bastard not to be removed from the mother whilst a nurse child.

If a mother and child have different settlements, it seems that the bastard child, like all other children, shall go with the mother for nurture until the age of seven years. Thus in Cripplegate v. Saint Saviour's (ante 274,) it was agreed by the whole court, that the age of a nurse child, so as to go along with its mother, is until seven years of age. So also in Skeffreth v. Walford (2 Sess. Ca. 90.) The order was to remove a woman to her settlement, and her bastard child, of two years of age, to another parish, at a distance from the mother, being the place of its birth. It was objected, that the child being a nurse child, it could not be separated from the mother, by reason of the care necessary to nurture so very young a child, which none can be supposed so fit to administer as the mother of it; and therefore it should have been sent with her to the place of her settlement. And the order was quashed by the court for that reason. But it appears to be settled, that although whilst the child continues with its mother as a nurse child, it is irremovable to its place of settlement, yet the parish where it is legally settled shall maintain such child in the other parish where it is resident with its mother.

To be maintained, whilst a nurse child by its own parish.

Same point.

Rex v. Hemlington, Dougl. 9, n. 2. Case:—Elizabeth, a single woman, with her child Mary, went under a certificate from Hemlington to Darlington, in which last parish she had two bastard children, and there became chargeable. An order being made for the removal of her and Mary to Hemlington, she took the two children who were born in Darlington with her, they being both under the age of emancipation. Two justices made an order on Darlington for the maintenance of the two bastard children, which order, upon an appeal, was quashed. It was urged that there is no statute which gives the justices any authority to make an order for the maintenance of children on a parish where they do not actually reside. Lord Mansfield, C. J. said no authorities have been cited in support of this proposition, and there are many against it; Rex v. St. Giles's in the Fields (Burr. S. C. 2); Rex v. Wangford (2 Wils. 3; Fort. 307); and Rex v. Saxmundham (2 Bott, 18), which is directly in point. The practice is also agreeably to those cases. Aston, J. cited another case, where it was directly held that the parish where the settlement of the nurture child is shall maintain it. Judgment to quash the order of sessions, and confirm the original order by which the parish of Darlington was charged.

There is no difference between bastards and legitimate children under such circumstances.

Shermandbury v. Bolney, Carth. 279. A woman with three children, all under seven, being settled in Shermandbury, married a person settled in Bolney. After the marriage the mother and the three children were sent to Bolney. The parish of Shermandbury, before the marriage, allowed 3s. per week for three children; and the payment being discontinued after the marriage, on complaint of the parish of Bolney, two justices made an order that Shermandbury should continue to pay the 3s. The sessions, and afterwards B. R., confirmed the order of the justices. And the court said, "This case is within the equity of the statute for the relief of the poor, and there is no reason that Shermandbury should be discharged of the children by their mother's marriage. The inconvenience, when the two parishes are at a great distance from each other is only similar to what is experienced on appeals brought on removals from parishes at a greater distance. As to the method of enforcing the order, it may be done by indictment, or perhaps the parish officers in whose behalf it is made might maintain a special action of assumpsit against those upon whom it was made." (Vide Rex v. Toms, Dougl. 401.) In Rann v. Green (1 Cowp. 474), the court held, that when persons acting under a private act of parliament, make an order by authority of such act for the payment of money, the law raises an assumpsit, and the same rule must hold in the case of a public act. (a)

3. Removal of Children.

4. OF REMOVAL OF SERVANTS.

4. Of Removal of Servants.

It has already been observed that the justices have no power, upon the complaint of the parish officers, to remove a servant from his master, because that would be to dissolve the contract betwixt the master and his servant, which can only be done upon the complaint of the master or servant. Therefore if a female servant happens to be pregnant, and the child is likely to be born a bastard, yet if her master is willing to keep her, the parish cannot remove her; whilst, on the other hand, the master, if he pleases, may complain to a justice of the peace that she is less able to perform the service, and the justice (if he sees cause) may discharge her; and thereupon the parish officers, having obtained the order of two justices, may remove her.

Whether the servant may be removed from the master.

Rex v. Bleworth, Burr. 302, 304. Where a servant was hired for three years on certain conditions, Lord Chief Justice Lee put an end to the argument on the contract by saying "How could the justices remove him out of the service?" It appears that the man was actually in the service at the time of the removal. And the court quashed the order.

In Farrington v. Witty, 2 Salk. 527; 2 Bott, 295, it was determined that excepting on complaint of the master, a servant could not be removed from his master's service, although the parish officers did complain. (See Rex v. Brampton, infra.)

Servant not removable from master's service.

Rex v. Marlborough, 12 Mod. 402; 2 Bott, 42. An order of removal was made of a female servant, who within her year of service was pregnant of a bastard. The court: "If one hire a woman for a year, and before the year's end she is got with child, she shall not for that be removed, but shall serve out her time. This however is good cause for discharge from her service; and after her discharge she might be removed."

Discharging a female for bastardy is a dissolution.

Rex v. Brampton (ante, 439.) A female servant may be discharged by her master for being with child, and may then be removed to her settlement.

Rex v. Alveley, 3 East, 563. Jane Hinson, single woman, was removed from Kinver to Aveley by an order stating "That Jane is with child, and is therefore deemed chargeable to K., and the justices upon proof, &c. &c." did adjudge the same to be true, &c. &c., proceeded to adjudge the settlement. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was settled in Alveley, and some time previous to Michaelmas, 1801, hired herself for a year to E. C., of K., for a year. She entered and served till September 2d, 1802, when she being about seven months gone with child, the parish officers of K. insisted upon her going before two magistrates for the purpose of being examined as to the place of her settlement, and accordingly took her away from her service on the evening of that day, and the next morning brought her before the magistrates, who made the order of removal. The pauper's master had made no complaints against her, he did not consent to her being taken away, but objected to it, as did the pauper herself, who was perfectly able to do her work. After her examination had been taken, she returned to her master's service, and on the following day the parish officers removed her under the order from Kinver to A., telling her at the same time that she might return to Kinver. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If the order of removal were good, no doubt it would operate to dissolve the contract. In Rex v. Kenilworth, 2 T. R. 598, (post) the order of removal being unappealed from, was deemed valid; but this is now under appeal, and may be controverted. And that brings it to the question, whether the order was properly made? Was it not the meaning of the act to prevent the removal of persons until actually chargeable, who were before removable, if likely to become so; but not to make persons removable who were not proper objects of removal before that act? Could it be meant that a person in this situation should be torn away from her parents, whatever her condition in life may be, and however far removed from any probability of being a charge on the parish? Is there any instance to be found in the books before this act, of a woman, under these circumstances, being a person of substance, and yet deemed to be removable? The substance of a person so situated repels the idea of her being chargeable; and the act did not mean to make any one removable who was not so antecedently to the passing of the act. The general provision is, that no person shall be removable till actually chargeable; and the 6th section introduces an exception to that general rule, leaving the person so circumstanced to the operation of the law, as it stood before the passing of the act." [The respondent's counsel observed, that there were no facts stated in the case to show that the woman was not a person who was likely to become chargeable at the time of the order made, or that the removing magistrates had not exercised their judgment upon that fact; on the contrary, they adjudge her to be chargeable, and before the act in question, such a person was removable.] Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "There is nothing of that sort stated in the case, nor any thing in the order itself to show that the magistrates adjudged her to be chargeable otherwise than as a consequence of law in their understanding of the act of parliament; they adjudge that she is with child, 'and is therefore deemed chargeable to the parish of Kinver.' But though the act says that such a person shall be 'deemed and taken to be actually chargeable;' yet that must be understood to be secundum subjectam materiam, or as the act itself expresses it, 'chargeable within the true intent and meaning of this act,' which I have before explained. It lies upon the respondents to show, that before this passed, the mere circumstance of a single woman in the service of another, being with child, operated as a dissolution of the contract, and made her liable to be removed against the consent both of the master and servant." 5. Of Removals under 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 6, of Women with Child. (b)

A single woman serving a master under a contract of hiring and service, cannot, though pregnant of a child which will be born a bastard, be removed from her service, against her consent and his.

Order adjudging merely that the woman removed was with child and unmarried, without drawing the conclusion that she was chargeable, is bad.

5. OF REMOVALS UNDER 35 GEO. III. c. 101, s. 6, OF WOMEN WITH CHILD. (b)

See the statute, ante, 823, 824; see Rex v. Tibbenham, ante, 832, and Rex v. Sowerby, ante, 834, and Rex v. Alveley, ante, 837.

Rex v. Holm, East Waver Quarter, 11 East, 381. An order of removal of E. M. from Oulton Quarter, in W. to Holm, East Waver Quarter, in Holm Cultram, stated "That E. M., single woman, is with child and unmarried, we the said justices do adjudge the same to be true; and we do likewise adjudge that the lawful settlement of the said E. M. is in the said Holm, East Waver Quarter, &c. &c." Order confirmed. The objection to the order was "That it ought to have adjudged that the pauper was actually chargeable, and that it was not sufficient merely to state that she was with child and unmarried." Rex v. Alveley (ante, 837,) was cited. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If it were an irrefragable conclusion that being a single woman and with child, Will. 4, c. 76, s. 69. See observations in D'Oyley and Williams' edit. of Burn, tit. "Poor," 1126, 1127, 1140, 1141, But see ante, 824, note (a).

the party removed must be deemed to be chargeable within the meaning of this statute, then this order would be good; otherwise the justices ought to have drawn that conclusion, in order to show that in their judgment she was a proper object of removal within the poor laws. But consistently with this order, the party might have been a single woman with child, worth 10,000*l.*, or she might have given the most ample security to the parish against any charge which could be thrown upon them. The statute in question first gives the general rule that no persons shall be removed before they are actually chargeable. It then says that single women with child shall be deemed and taken to be actually chargeable, within the true intent of the act. But still the justices ought to draw the conclusion that she is within that general rule, otherwise every single woman with child, whatever might be her substance, might be removed by the parish officers. Being unmarried and with child, such a person is presumptively chargeable, from the strong probability of the fact that she must be so; but there may be circumstances, such as the substance of the party, or the giving a complete indemnity to the parish, which may exclude that presumption. Now every circumstance of that sort might have existed in this case, and yet the order, as it is framed, be true. In Rex v. Diddlebury (infra) the justices deemed her to have become chargeable; but she could not have been deemed to be chargeable if those circumstances had existed in her instance. It ought to appear by the order that the justices have exercised their judgment upon the matter, and repelled the existence of such circumstances by the adjudgment that she was chargeable, in order to show that she was a proper object of removal within the meaning of the law."

Rex v. Diddlebury, 9 East, 398. Upon complaint "That Ann Evans, single woman, had come to inhabit, &c. &c., and is, by being pregnant, deemed to have become chargeable to the said parish of T." two justices, "upon due proof made thereof, did adjudge the same to be true." Case:—The pauper, Ann Evans, being a single woman, legally settled in D., and becoming actually chargeable to T., within the meaning of the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 6, by being pregnant with a child who had since been born a bastard, was removed from T. to Diddlebury, and the pauper appearing to be a labourer without substance, the mother of other bastard children, and not a hired servant, was properly removed as actually chargeable. This case was argued immediately after Rex v. Tibbenham (ante, 832); they both stood over, and after giving judgment in that case, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "That there was little more to add with respect to this, than that the orders should be confirmed. On the facts of the case, as bringing it within the general policy of the poor laws, and the words of 35 Geo. III., there could be no doubt, and with respect to the form of the order of removal, the premises are stated, as in the statute itself, from whence the conclusion is drawn; and therefore all is stated which the statute requires."

Rex v. Great Yarmouth, 8 T. R. 68. Mary Pestile, widow, was removed from Great Yarmouth to Ditchingham. Order quashed for informality, but no case stated. In the order of removal it was recited and adjudged, that the pauper was with child which was likely to be born a bastard; that she was living in Great Yarmouth, not having gained a settlement there; that she was deemed to be a person actually chargeable to Great Yarmouth, and that her place of settlement was at Ditchingham; without negating her having a certificate from any parish. The question intended to be raised was, whether or not the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, extends to an unmarried woman who is residing under a certificate? Per Curiam: "The orders which alone are before the court are scarcely sufficient to raise the question that (it is said) was meant to be agitated; but even if they were, this pauper comes within the words of the statute alluded to, which are general, 'every unmarried woman, &c.;' and also within the reason of the act. This clause seems to have been introduced for the very purpose of remedying what was before an apparent defect in the poor laws; for before that act passed, a certificated person in this situation could not have been removed, although the child when born would be settled in the certificated parish. Therefore as the words of the statute are sufficiently comprehensive to include this case, there is no reason why we should narrow or abridge the construction of them, so as to prevent their extending to a case that wanted the remedy." Rule absolute.

6. Removal of Casual Poor.

6. OF REMOVAL OF CASUAL POOR.

We have before considered the duty of overseers to relieve casual poor in the parish where they have sustained any accident or have been suddenly taken ill, (ante, 88 to 100,) and incidentally how far the power of removal, under the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12 (ante, 820,) or 35 Geo. III. c. 101 (ante, 823), is in such cases taken away or suspended during such illness. Reference to the statutes and decisions in that part of the work (ante, 88 to 100) must be had when any question as to the removal of such paupers may occur.

If a pauper meets with an accident in a particular parish, that parish is bound to provide for him as casual poor, until he be cured; nor can they relieve themselves by removing such pauper into an adjoining parish, or his proper parish; (Tomlinson v. Bentall, 8 D. & R. 493; 5 B. & C. 738, ante, 90, and Rex v. Bury, 10 East, 25, ante, 92); for no person is removable from the parish where he is, unless under some positive enactment, and he is not, being within the enactment in the statute Car. II. Per Lord Ellenborough, in 10 East, 25.

But a pauper who had been sent backwards and forwards from one parish to another, and been occasionally relieved by both, was holden removable.

Rex v. Birmingham, 14 East, 251. Mary Hoppins and her children were removed from Feckenham to Birmingham. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was resident in the parish of Inkberrow, in Worcestershire, renting a house there, and receiving relief from I. Upon applying, as usual, for this relief to the officers of the parish, it was refused her, and she was desired to go to the officers of Feckenham, an adjoining parish, in which some of her husband's relations had resided; this she did: F. refused relief, and sent her back to I. Upon her return to I. and again applying there for relief, they refused and desired her to apply again to F.; and when she expressed an unwillingness to do so, one of the overseers of I. took her to F., without any order of removal, and told her not to return again to I. Upon her being thus brought to F. the officers of F. relieved her, and at the same time threatened to send her to prison if she returned to I. She remained in F. for eight or ten days, not having previously had any abode there; at the end of that time she was removed by an order of two magistrates from F. to Birmingham. The question was, whether the pauper, being in the parish of F. under such circumstances, was liable to be so removed? Rex v. St. James, Bury St. Edmund's (ante, 90), was cited to show she was irremovable as casual poor. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "That was a very different case. This was the case of a starving vagrant, in whichever of the two parishes she was, who was going backwards and forwards between them, and would have been starved if she had not received temporary relief from one or the other. She was liable to be removed from either. How then can this oscillation between the two parishes affect the order of removal to her proper parish?" Orders confirmed.

Foreigners.

Foreigners, who have not gained a settlement, are to be relieved as casual poor.

Must be maintained where they are found.

Cowred's case, T., 6 W. & M., Comb. 287; 2 Bott, 17. A Dutchwoman and her two children landed at Harwich from Holland, and removing to another place, were sent back to Harwich by an order of two justices. Eyre, J., (Holt, C. J., being absent), said, "You must keep them when you have them for aught I know; for it seems to be a case omitted out of the statute." Order quashed.

7. *Of the Removal of Poor Persons,
&c.*

7. OF THE REMOVAL OF POOR PERSONS BORN IN SCOTLAND, IRELAND, ISLES OF MAN, AND SCILLY.

The repealed enactments relative to removal of

The 17 Geo. II. c. 5, and 59 Geo. III. c. 12, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, contained enactments relating to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and which enactments, with some decisions thereon, may be found ante, 96 to 100.

The following are further cases on these acts:—

Rex v. Benett and Broughton, Esqs. Justices of Middlesex, 2 Bar. & Adol. 712. Catherine Hines, an Irish pauper, being pregnant, was at her own request on the 9th of March, 1831, admitted into the workhouse belonging to the parish of St. Luke, Middlesex, and on the 23d was there delivered of a male bastard child. She resided in the workhouse from the time of her admission, and was during that time chargeable to the parish. On the 6th of May the parish officers took her before the defendants, William Benett, Esq. and Robert Edwards Broughton, Esq., two magistrates for the county, and required them by a pass under their hands and seals to cause her to be removed, and her infant child also, for the purpose of nurture. They refused so to do. A rule nisi was afterwards obtained for a mandamus to compel them to sign an order or pass for the removal of the pauper with her male bastard child (for nurture only) from the said parish of St. Luke to Ireland, in the manner directed by the statutes in such case made and provided. Lord Tenterden, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court. "This case was very well argued in the course of this term. The difficulty is in saying what precisely ought to be done under the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, which provides for the removal of Irish and Scotch paupers in the mode pointed out as to rogues and vagabonds, by 17 G. II. c. 5, s. 13, 14. It was said in support of the rule, that where a woman settled in one parish in England had a bastard child born in another parish, also in England, it had been usual to remove the child with the mother for nurture, and that it was then taken care of by the parish to which it was sent, at the expense of the parish where it was settled by birth. On the other hand, it was contended, that the child having a settlement in the parish where it was born, the act of parliament gave the justices no power to remove it; and it was observed, that where a child was removed with its mother from parish to parish in England, no difficulty arose, because one parish or the other was obliged to give it present support, but that in Ireland, where there are no poor laws, there was no parish which could be called upon to nurture the child, nor any one to enforce maintenance from the place of its birth. There was much weight in those observations. There may certainly be great inconvenience in separating the mother and child; still, if the law gives no authority to remove the child, that inconvenience cannot be avoided while the law continues as it is. And it is clear that by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, no such power is given. That section requires two justices, upon complaint that any person born in Scotland or Ireland hath become chargeable to a parish by himself or herself, or his or her family, to enquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, have any settlement in England; and if it shall be found that such person born in Scotland or in Ireland has no settlement in England, and has become chargeable to such parish by himself, or his or her family, then by a pass to cause such poor person, his wife and such of his or her children as shall not have gained a settlement in England, to be removed to the place of his or her birth, in the manner directed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 13 and 14. The statute therefore authorizes and requires the justices to remove to Ireland the mother who has not gained any settlement in England, but it gives them no power to remove the child which has acquired a settlement there by its birth. There may undoubtedly be hardship in removing the mother without the child, but that must be submitted to, for the act is imperative. The rule, therefore, must be made absolute as to the removal of the mother, and discharged as to that of the child." Rule absolute for the removal of the mother, discharged as to that of the child.

Rex v. Mile-end Old Town, 5 Nev. & Man. 581. Appeal against an order of removal of Ann Cotterall and her bastard child from St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, to Mile-end Old Town. Case:—Ann Cotterall, aged 18 years, who has never done any act to gain a settlement in her own right, was born in wedlock, in Mile-end Old Town of Irish parents who have not gained any settlement in England. On the 20th August, 1834, she was delivered of a

Under the statute 59 G. 3, c. 12, s. 33, an Irish female pauper having a bastard child born in a parish in England, and within the age of nurture, may, on becoming chargeable, be passed to Ireland though the child cannot be sent with her, the act not authorizing the removal of any settled person.

The daughter of Irish parents who had gained no settlement in England, she and the family are removable to Ireland under 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 40, though she was above 18 and born in England. The provisions of this act are not affected by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 56, limiting the age during which a parent is considered liable for relief given to his child to 16.

Where the daughter of an Irish pauper is removed with her father to Ireland under 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 40, her bastard child born in England cannot be removed with her.

male bastard child in St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, in the house of her father, with whom she continued to reside as part of his family, occasionally going out charing; and on 21th August, 1834, application was made by her mother to the overseers of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, for relief for Ann Cotterall and her bastard child only, upon which the order appealed against was made. The question for the decision of the court is, whether reference being had to the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2, and 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, ss. 56 & 71, the pauper and her bastard child were settled in Mile-end Old Town. On a subsequent day in this term, the judgment of the court was delivered by Patteson, J., (Lord Denman, C. J., being absent) as follows:—"The question in this case is, whether the removal of the pauper, with her infant bastard child, to the appellant hamlet can be sustained; and that depends upon this further and principal question, whether she ought not to have been removed with her father to Ireland, under the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2. The case states that the pauper was born in the appellant hamlet, of Irish parents, who have gained no settlement in England. They, therefore, are directly within the section of the statute above referred to, if at the time of this order made the father had become chargeable to the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, provided the effect of it has not been altered by the subsequent statute of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. And it seems to us that the pauper's father was so chargeable at the time in question. The language of the 2d section of the first-mentioned act, with reference to this subject, is, 'hath become chargeable by himself or herself, or his or her family.' Now the pauper was, at the time of her removal, living with her father as a part of his family, having done no act, nor having contracted any relations inconsistent with that character. Relief therefore to the pauper under her father's roof, in the manner stated in the case, did render the father removable to Ireland, and as a consequence the daughter also. It is now to be considered how far the former act is affected by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. And it is at once observable that the object of the two statutes is perfectly distinct. The former is confined merely to making provisions for the removal of certain persons born in Ireland, Scotland, &c. who have gained no settlements in this country. No question affecting the removal or settlement of persons born in England is touched or attended to; whereas the objects and provisions of the latter statute are purely and exclusively English. Various and important alterations are made in the laws respecting the gaining of settlements, the duty of overseers, and the management of the poor; all of which are of necessity applicable and confined to England. It is observable also, that the title of the act itself purports to concern England and Wales, and them only; nor do we perceive any regulation which has the slightest relation to Ireland, Scotland, &c., the places enumerated in the first mentioned statute. We think therefore that the sound construction and interpretation of the two statutes is to hold them to be in effect and operation, as they are in object, wholly separate and distinct. This being so, we are of opinion that the provision in the 56th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, as to the age up to which the parent is to be deemed answerable for relief given to a child, viz. sixteen, (whatever might have been its effect upon relief given to a child above that age, as to the chargeability of the parent, if the parties had been English,—on which we give no opinion,) does not apply to the present case, depending, as it has been already stated it does, on the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, s. 2. We think therefore that the character of the daughter's residence with the father, and his liability to maintain her and to be considered chargeable by relief given to her, are to be considered as they would have been if the latter act had not passed. It is true that in Rex v. Whitehaven (ante, 99,) the sessions had quashed an order of justices removing an Irish woman pregnant, and living with her parents unemancipated, to her birth settlement, upon the ground (as stated in the case) that, he ought to have been sent with her parents by a pass to Ireland under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, (which has the same expressions as to the chargeability of the father as the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, viz. 'became chargeable by himself or his family:') and this court quashed the order of sessions upon, as it seems, but little discussion, and with not very much consideration. Upon that case two things are to be observed; first, that the question how far the woman, circumstanced as she was, could gain a settlement by birth, was not noticed at all; whereas, in the case of Rex v. Leeds (ante, 97,) that question was considered, and it was held that birth in such case gave no settlement,—next, that the decision proceeds expressly upon the ground that under the 59th Geo. III. the chargeability contemplated by the statute was the actual asking for relief, and not the constructive chargeability (by pregnancy) under the 35th Geo. III. c. 101; upon which it may be sufficient to observe, that the defect upon which the court held the decision of the sessions wrong, does not exist here. Relief in this case was actually asked for and given before the order of removal was made. It remains to be added, that according to the authority of Rex v. Bennett and Broughton (ante, 841,) the bastard in this case cannot be removed with the mother to Ireland. This however is a circumstance not necessary for our decision, which is, that the removal of the pauper, which should have been to Ireland, having been made to the appellant hamlet, is wrong; and that therefore the order of removal and the order of sessions confirming the same, must be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

The 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 40, s. 1, after reciting that it was expedient to amend the laws relating to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland, the Isles of Man and Scilly, and chargeable in parishes in England, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof, then repeals so much of the Vagrant Act, 17 Geo. II. c. 5, 59 Geo. III. c. 12 and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 2, as authorizes two justices upon complaint of overseers of any parish, township, or place, maintaining its own poor, by an order of removal, instead of a pass, to remove by sea or land any chargeable poor born in Scotland or Ireland, or in the Isles of Man or Scilly, at the expense of the complaining parish, but to be repaid by the county in which it is situate. Sect. 3 enacts that the justices at sessions shall direct how the parties shall be removed. (a) Sect. 4. Justices at Quarter Sessions are to make rules for carrying the act into execution. Sect. 5. Churchwardens and overseers are to be repaid their expenses out of the county rate. Sect. 6 directs how expenses are to be defrayed of removing poor persons within London. Sect. 7 declares how expenses are to be defrayed when the parish is situate in any city or place not contributing to the county rate. Sect. 8 enacts that the act shall continue in force till 1st May, 1836, and to the end of the then next session of parliament. A Schedule contains the form of the order of removal, and the form of examinations.

8. OF THE REMOVAL OF POOR PERSONS BORN IN JERSEY AND GUERNSEY.

We must here refer to statute 11 Geo. IV. c. 5, (ante, 97) repealing so much of 17 Geo. II. c. 6, as relates to the removal of vagrants, and of 59 Geo. III. c. 12, and of 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, as relates to the passing and removing vagrants and poor persons born in Jersey and Guernsey. See enactment 11 Geo. IV. c. 5, and cases thereon ante, 97 to 100.

9. OF SOLDIERS, OFFICERS, MARINERS, AND MARINES.

By 3 Geo. III. c. 8, officers, mariners, soldiers, and marines, who had served since 29th of November, 1748, and not deserted; and by 42 Geo. III. c. 69, the like persons who had served since 16th of July, 1784, and by 42 Geo. III. c. 60, s. 3, and 42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 75, all militia-men, being married men, who had personally served in actual service for five years; and by 56 Geo. III. c. 67, all such persons as aforesaid, who had been employed since 22d of June, 1802, and also all fencibles who had served five years, and been honourably discharged, and also their wives and children, might set up such trades as aforesaid, without any molestation by reason of the using of

9. Of Soldiers, and Mariners. certain trades, nor should they, or their wives or children, during the time they shall exercise such trades, be removable to their place of settlement until they shall become actually chargeable.

In Rex v. Gwenop (3 T. R. 133), it was determined that working as a husbandman was not a trade within the meaning of the above act, and such persons are therefore removable.

However, 35 Geo. III. c. 101, has rendered these provisions unavailable, as far as respects removals, as that act provides that no person shall be removable till actually chargeable.

Militia men, &c.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 6, so much of 43 Geo. III. c. 47, is repealed as authorized relief to be given to the wives and families of substitutes, hired men, or volunteers of militia; and also so much as prevents such families from being removable to their place of legal settlement, or sent to any workhouse, by reason of their receiving any allowance or being chargeable.

10. Woolcombers not removable.

Persons who have served apprenticeship to any branch of the woollen manufactures, and their wives and families, may set up and exercise any trade in any place in Great Britain, &c.

Not removable.

10. WOOLCOMBERS NOT REMOVABLE.

By 49 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 5, it is enacted, "That all such persons who have served an apprenticeship to any branch of the woollen manufacture, or who are by law entitled to use and exercise the same, and also the wives and children of such persons, may set up and exercise such trade, or any other trade or business which they are apt and able for in any town or place within Great Britain, without any let, suit, or molestation of any person or persons whatsoever, for or by reason of the using of such trade: nor shall any such person, or their wives or children, during the time they shall exercise such trade, be removable from such respective place or places to his, her, or their last legal place of settlement, by virtue of any law now in being relative to the settlement of the poor, until such person or persons shall become actually chargeable to such parish or place; and if any such person, or the wife or child of any such person, shall be sued, impleaded, or indicted in any court whatsoever within this kingdom, for using or exercising any such trade as aforesaid, then the said person, or the wife or child of any such person, making it appear to the same court where they are so sued, impleaded, or indicted, that they have served a legal apprenticeship to the said trade as aforesaid, or that he, she, or they, is or are the wife or wives, child or children, of such person or persons who shall have so served a legal apprenticeship as aforesaid, shall upon the general issue pleaded be found not guilty in any plaint, bill, information, or indictment exhibited against them; and such persons who, notwithstanding this act, shall prosecute the said suit by bill, plaint, information, or indictment, and shall have a verdict pass against him, or become nonsuit therein, or discontinue their said suit, such person or persons shall pay unto such persons who have served an apprenticeship to, or who may be entitled to exercise any branch of the woollen manufacture, or the wife or child of such person respectively, double costs of suit, to be recovered as any other costs at common law may be recovered; and all judges and juries before whom any such suit, information, or indictment shall be brought, and all other persons whatsoever, are to take notice of this present act, and shall conform themselves thereto, any statute, law, ordinance, custom, or provision to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

1. PLACE FROM AND TO WHICH AN ORDER OF REMOVAL MAY BE MADE.

The Forest of Dean v. Linton, 2 Salk. 487; Fol. 96, 97; 2 Bott, 688. If a place be extra-parochial and hath no overseers the justices cannot remove from thence, because there are none either to complain or to convey; but the justices ought first to appoint overseers and then to remove. (But see Rex v. Mereval, Burr. S. C. 661.)

There can be no removal from an extra-parochial place where there are no overseers.

Bridewell v. Clerkenwell, 2 Salk. 486; Carth. 515; 1 Ld. Raym. 549. H. served seven years to a hemp-dresser in the precinct of Bridewell, and afterwards lived in Clerkenwell, without gaining a settlement, and the justices removed him to Bridewell as his last legal settlement, by an order which set forth Bridewell to be an extra-parochial place. Holt, C. J. "If a place is extra-parochial, and has not the force of a parish, the justices have no authority to send any man thither; and so it was resolved in the case of Sir J. Osborn. Possibly a place extra-parochial may be taxed in aid of a parish, but a parish shall not in aid of that. This is casus omissus." Order quashed.

Paupers not removable to or from extra-parochial places.

Rex v. Tamworth, Cald. 28; 2 Bott, 633. T. Goff and family were removed from the hamlet of Bolehall and Glascote to the parish of Tamworth, adjudging their settlement to be at Sirescote, in the parish of Tamworth, and ordering the overseers of Tamworth to receive them. Order confirmed. The pauper was hired for a year, and served that year at Sirescote, which is a hamlet consisting of one house only, and between three and four hundred acres of land; but had never contributed to the poor of the parish of Tamworth, nor had ever been assessed thereto; but had been always assessed and paid to the support of the church of Tamworth. No overseers had ever been appointed for the hamlet of Sirescote. The pauper and his family were delivered to the churchwardens of the parish of Tamworth. It was insisted, that the circumstance of the hamlet never having contributed towards those burthens which the law threw upon the whole parish was immaterial, and that this place could never be considered as a vill within the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, there being only one house, and no overseers, and that this was a part of the parish. On the other side it was contended, that this was a distinct vill, independent of the parish, and to which no pauper could be sent until it had officers duly appointed: that the justices had stated this to be a hamlet, and adjudged, that the pauper had therein gained a settlement. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There is no doubt at all: the place is averred to be within the parish where the hiring and service were had and performed, and it has no township or vill within the stat. of Car. II. where officers are appointed, and therefore the justices could not remove the pauper there; here are no overseers, no separate economy: the adjudication is to Sirescote, as part of the parish of Tamworth." The other judges concurred. Both orders affirmed.

Removals to a hamlet sustained, as a removal to the parish of which the hamlet was part.

Rex v. Saughton-on-the-Hill, 2 B. & Ald. 162. Removal from St. Bridget, Chester, to Saughton-on-the-Hill. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper,

Where the pauper had been a settled inhabitant in the township of A., and had subsequently acquired a settlement in the township of B., which township had since been extinguished: Held, that he could not be removed to A., or to any other parish.

Where a district previously extra-parochial, was by act of parliament made a township, and it was provided, that from thenceforth it should maintain its own poor and repair its own roads, and have the like powers, privileges, and immunities, and be subject to the same regulations as other townships within the county: Held, that this clause was prospective only, and that a bastard born within the district previously to passing the act, was not settled there.

Joseph Gill, being settled in Saughton-on-the-Hill, about twenty years ago acquired a subsequent settlement by renting a tenement in the township of Gloverstone, in the parish of St. Mary-on-the-Hill, in the city of Chester, in which parish there are several townships, each separately maintaining its own poor. Of these townships Gloverstone was one, and was situated in the county palatine, and not in the city. At the time the pauper obtained a settlement in Gloverstone it was a township, having overseers, and maintaining its own poor, which continued to be the case until about ten years ago, when all the houses in the township were taken down for the purpose of enlarging Chester castle. There are now no buildings in the township of Gloverstone, except part of the courts of the county, and some barracks and other buildings belonging to the Barrack Board. No overseers have been appointed for the township of Gloverstone for the last ten years, and there is no place within the township inhabited by persons capable of being appointed overseers. Abbott, C. J. "The authority of magistrates to remove paupers exists only and is derived from the express provisions of an act of parliament; and in a new case the best mode for the court is to form their judgment on the very words of the act. There may be many cases where a pauper having no settlement in the place where he may happen to be, may still not be removable from it; either because he has no settlement at all, or because the parish officers are not enabled to discover the place of his settlement. The words of the act are, that any two justices of the peace may by their warrant remove and convey persons likely to be chargeable to the parish where he or they were last legally settled. It is, therefore, enough for the court in deciding this case to say, that Saughton is not the parish where the pauper was legally settled, inasmuch as he appears to have subsequently acquired a settlement in Gloverstone, by which the former settlement was extinguished. The justices, therefore, in this case had no authority to remove the pauper; and the sessions have done wrong in confirming their order." Bayley and Holroyd, Js. concurred.

Rev v. Oakmere, 1 D. & R. 427; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 109; 5 B. & Ald. 775. John Bradford was removed from Over Tabley to Oakmere. Order confirmed. The township of Oakmere was before and until the passing of a certain act of parliament, in the fifty-second year of his late Majesty, part of the forest of Delamere, in the county of Chester, and an extra-parochial place. By that act, intituled, "An Act for Inclosing the Forest of Delamere, in the county of Chester," the forest was in December, 1819, duly divided into four separate townships, of which Oakmere was one. Since that time overseers of the poor have been duly appointed for the township of Oakmere. The pauper, John Bradford, was born many years ago, a bastard, in Oakmere, whilst it was an extra-parochial place, and part of the forest of Delamere. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether such order of removal to Oakmere, as the birth-place of the pauper, could be sustained? The following were the clauses in the local act on which the question depended: "And be it further enacted, that the district called or known by the name of Delamere Forest, and all such lands lying contiguous thereto, as are now extra-parochial, shall, as soon as the moiety of the said forest, which is hereby directed to be allotted to and amongst the persons enjoying rights of common thereon, shall have been so allotted, divided, and inclosed, be and be deemed and taken to be a parish, and called and known by the name of Delamere parish, and shall for ever thereafter be and be deemed and taken to be a rectory. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall, and they are hereby authorized and required to, divide the said parish into two or more townships, to be called and distinguished by such names as the said commissioners shall appoint; and when the same shall be so divided, each and every such township shall, from thenceforth for ever thereafter, provide for its own poor, make and maintain its own roads, and have, enjoy, and be vested with such and the like powers, privileges, and immunities, and be subject to the same regulations as are incident to, and as are had, held, and enjoyed by the several other townships within the said county of Chester, by the laws and statutes of that part of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called England." C. a. v. Abbott, C. J. "This case arises on the act 52 Geo. III. for inclosing the forest of Delamere, and the question is, whether the district newly created into a township under this statute, which before was neither in any parish nor township, is to be considered as if it had formerly been a parish or township, with regard to settlements; or only as becoming so from the time of its creation under the act, and as if it had formerly been wholly uninhabited? And we are of opinion that the latter is the true construction and effect of the statute. If the former construction should be adopted much inconvenience and litigation might ensue. Many parishes wherein paupers have been considered as legally settled, and have accordingly been maintained, might relieve themselves from their burden, by removing to this new township not only illegitimate persons born within the district whereof the township consists, but also many of those who had been servants, or apprentices, or had rented tenements of the yearly value of 10*l.* within it. By such removals a heavy burden might be thrown at once upon the new township. It is true, on the other hand, that the new township, having now overseers, may remove persons which the inhabitants of the district could not previously do; but then the inhabitants were not previously under the same legal obligation to maintain the poor who might be found within it as a parish or township; the consequence of which must have been, that such poor would in general find their way without removal into those parishes or townships that were compellable to maintain them, so that the new power of removal would not be likely to afford a relief commensurate with the new burden; and the former want of the power of removal might have the effect of charging this new township with the maintenance of persons under circumstances, in which, if the district had been previously a township, the inhabitants might have taken care to prevent the burden from falling upon them, as by the removal of unmarried pregnant women, or of persons coming to settle on tenements under 10*l.* a year, especially before the statute 35 Geo. III. c. 101. The latter, indeed, would not acquire a settlement for themselves, but settlements might be derived under them by apprentices and servants. And this is not like the case of a modern appointment of overseers to places that formerly had no such officers, because all such places must have been villis from time immemorial, and, consequently, under a legal obligation to maintain their poor, and possessing a legal right to the appointment of officers; and by such appointment to remove persons under the same circumstances as other townships or parishes might do. The consequence of this opinion is, that both the orders must be quashed."

Rex v. Cartmel, 4 Nev. & M. 357; 2 Ad. & Ell. 262. (a) Appeal against an order of justices removing Robert Armer from Burton to Cartmel. Order confirmed. Case:—The settlement relied upon by the respondents was by hiring and service at East Plain, in 1822. East Plain was before the act of parliament and award hereinafter mentioned part of a salt marsh formed by the gradual retiring of the sea, but occasionally overflowed by the tide, which salt marsh was part of the waste lands within the parish of Cartmel, and is bounded on the one side by the sea, and on the other by the ancient inclosed lands of the townships of Lower Holker and Lower Allithwaite, both within the said parish of Cartmel; but whether East Plain was within or formed part of any of the other five townships hereinafter mentioned in the said parish, no other evidence was given than its local situation as above set forth, and the act of parliament and award hereinafter mentioned. There are in the parish of Cartmel seven townships, viz. Upper and Lower Holker, Upper and Lower Allithwaite, Broughton, Staveley, and Cartmel. Each of them maintaining its own poor separately, and has a separate poor rate, and separate overseers. All the lands in the parish (except it be the said salt marsh, which East Plain is part of,) are comprised within one or other of these townships. There are no overseers of the poor for the parish at large, nor have any ever been appointed; neither is there or has there ever been any poor rate for the parish

The parish of C. was divided into seven townships, each maintaining its own poor, and there being no overseers or rate for the whole parish. A waste salt marsh within the parish, not belonging to any township, was awarded by the commissioners of an inclosure act to pay a quantum of rate to each of the townships, and a settlement having been gained in such waste, it was held, that the removal of the pauper to the parish of C. was bad, it not appearing that there were any parties to whom the order could be directed.

at large, or any parochial funds out of which the poor can be maintained. The notice of appeal against the order of removal was signed by all the churchwardens and all the overseers of the poor of all the said townships respectively, wherein they described themselves as the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Cartmel, and the appeal was entered as that of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Cartmel. The pauper was delivered to the overseer of the township of Lower Holker, with whom he still remained. By stat. 36 Geo. III. c. lxiv. (private), "For Improving, Dividing, and Inclosing the Commons, Waste Grounds, and Mosses, in the parish of Cartmel," (which act was made part of the case,) it was enacted, "that the commissioners appointed by the said act should draw up an award, which should specify and direct in what township or division within the said parish of Cartmel the several messuages, tenements, lands, mosses, and hereditaments, which should be exchanged, divided, or allotted by virtue of that act, should lie, or be parcel, and should be charged and pay all such taxes and assessments as should become due and payable in respect thereof." The commissioners in 1809 made their award, which, after allotting East Plain to certain persons, went on to order "that the said allotment or parcel of ground shall from time to time, and at all times hereafter, be subject to, and charged, and chargeable with the payment of such proportion of all rates, taxes, and assessments, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, out of the yearly value thereof, to the several townships or divisions within the said parish of Cartmel as are hereinafter mentioned, (that is to say,) to the township or division of Broughton after the rate of two-thirteenth parts or shares of the whole annual value thereof," &c. (the case then proceeded to state the proportions in which East Plain was directed by the award to contribute to the other townships respectively); "such several rates or assessments to be made in proportion as the said allotment bears in value with the estates of other proprietors in the said several townships or divisions." Since the making of the above-mentioned award the poor rates in respect of East Plain have been paid to the several townships within the parish of Cartmel, in the proportions named in the award. Thus, if there be a rate of 6d. in the pound on the annual value of lands in the township of Broughton, then East Plain pays to the overseer of the poor for the township of Broughton a rate of 6d. in the pound or two-thirteenth parts of the annual value, and so mutatis mutandis of the other townships. On these facts the appellants contended, that as East Plain was a part of a marsh which was derelict of the sea, and which marsh abutted on the townships of Lower Holker and Lower Allithwaite, East Plain was situate within one or other of those townships, and that the respondents ought to have ascertained within which of them it was situate, and to have removed accordingly; and that a removal to a parish which had no poor rate and no overseers was bad. But the sessions held, that as East Plain, where the pauper gained a settlement, was within the appellant parish of Cartmel, it was for the appellants to show, not merely that there was no poor rate made and no overseer ever appointed for the parish at large, but that East Plain was within some one or other of the seven townships, and they were of opinion that as far as appeared it might be within none of those townships, although it was within the parish of Cartmel. They therefore confirmed the order. Lord Denman, C. J. "It is impossible to say how the matter may turn out on further inquiry. The mere fact of the inclosure is not sufficient to guide us; but at all events we must see that no party is called on to do that which he is not bound to do." Littledale and Williams, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

If the place is a township, but described as a parish, and no appeal is had, it is conclusive.

Spitalfields v. Bromley, 18 Vin. Abr. 468; 2 Bott, 890. A pauper was sent to the parish of Stepney, who did not appeal. On removal of the order into the King's Bench, exception was taken, that the removal ought to have been to the township of Spitalfields; for Stepney is divided into four townships, and the poor have been removed from one township to another, in the same parish, and the statute takes notice of townships as well as parishes, and Spitalfields is a hamlet of Stepney. By the court: "If a person is removed to a wrong place, that place ought to appeal, and so Stepney ought to have done if it were a wrong place, or else the order will be conclusive upon them; but this is a matter here out of the record. Justices of the peace are not obliged to take notice of the divisions of parishes into townships and villages which maintain their own poor severally and distinctly; and Stepney here, upon an appeal, might have shown that the person did belong to the township of Spitalfields, which might have been a reasonable cause to discharge the order. Two townships within a parish are the same as two parishes; yet churchwardens are overseers of the poor of the whole of the parish, (though so divided,) and have a superintendency over the whole villages and townships."

Rex v. Kirkby Stephen, Burr. S. C. 664; 2 Bott, 894. The parish of Kirkby Stephen consists of ten different townships, who maintain their respective poor, and have separate overseers. The township of Kirkby Stephen and the township of Wharton are two of them. The pauper, W. Greer, was removed from Newport, by an order directed to the officers of the parish of Kirkby Stephen, and adjudging his settlement to be in that parish, and removing him to that parish; and was delivered to the overseers of the township of Kirkby Stephen. But neither the parish of Kirkby Stephen, nor the township of Kirkby Stephen, appealed from the order; and the pauper remained in Kirkby Stephen, and was maintained by a sister, in the township of Kirkby Stephen, for near a year and a half; when his sister dying, he asked relief of the township of Kirkby Stephen, who thereupon got him removed by an order to the township of Wharton. Order quashed. By Lord Mansfield and the Court: "The original order made for the removal from Newport to the parish of Kirkby Stephen, must mean the township of Kirkby Stephen. The township was as a parish for the purpose of a removal to it; the poor within the parish not being maintained by the whole parish, but by the particular townships to which they respectively belong. The township of Kirkby Stephen ought in this case to have appealed. They could not get rid of this order but by appealing. And if they had appealed, the truth might have appeared. And when the facts had appeared to the justices upon the whole truth being disclosed, the pauper might in the end of the inquiry have been sent to Wharton." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. The Justices of Denbighshire, 1 B. & Ad. 616. D. Pollock had obtained a rule, calling upon the justices of Denbighshire to show cause why a certiorari should not issue, directed to them, to remove into this court all orders made by them between Thomas Owen, David Pritchard, and William Jenkins, inhabitants of part of the parish of Machynlleth, in the county of Montgomery, appellants, and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Llangerniew, in the county of Denbigh, respondents, touching the removal of certain paupers, and all proceedings relating thereto. The circumstances of the case were as follows:—By an order of removal, dated the 2d of September, 1829, the churchwardens and overseers of Llangerniew were directed to convey the paupers from that parish to the parish of Machynlleth, and to deliver them to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor there, or some or one of them, and the latter were required to receive the said paupers as inhabitants of their parish. Machynlleth was at that time divided into three districts, each maintaining its own poor. Two churchwardens were appointed for the whole parish, and one overseer for each district. The paupers were delivered to the overseer of one of these districts, namely, the township of Uwchygarreg, where their settlement was understood to be. The overseer of the township with the two parish churchwardens (describing themselves as churchwardens of the township) gave notice of appeal. The case came on at the next quarter sessions, and on proof of the service of the notice the appeal was dismissed on the grounds that there appeared to be only one overseer for the appellant district, and that the churchwardens described as of the township were in fact those of the parish. A fresh appeal was then entered at the same sessions on behalf of the above-mentioned T. Owen, D. Pritchard, and W. Jenkins, as inhabitants of a part of the parish of Machynlleth. These appellants were rated inhabitants of Uwchygarreg. Shortly afterwards two overseers were appointed for the same township, and they, with the churchwardens of the parish, then gave the respondent parish two notices of their intention to prosecute the appeal at the next sessions; one notice describing it generally as an appeal against an order, &c. the other, as an appeal lodged at the last sessions by the three inhabitants above named. These last-mentioned parties also gave notice at the same time of prosecuting their appeal; and another notice was given by the attorney for the appellants, describing himself as attorney for the three above-named inhabitants, for the churchwardens and overseers of the township. The appeal was heard at the following sessions, and the order of removal was there quashed upon the merits, with costs, by an order of sessions, purporting to be made between T. Owen, D. Pritchard, and W. Jenkins, inhabitants of the parish of Machynlleth, appellants; and the parish of Llangerniew, respondents. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think the rule ought to be discharged. This is a parish consisting of three divisions respectively maintaining their own poor. The order to receive the paupers was directed to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, but it seems the paupers were not taken to any regularly appointed officers of the parish, or of any district, or to the inhabitants; but to a single overseer, appointed for one township. An appeal was entered on behalf of the churchwardens and of the overseer for that township. The sessions held, that it could not be entertained, and dismissed it; but without going into the merits. A new appeal was entered at the same sessions in the names of some inhabitants of the parish, that course becoming necessary under the circumstances, and two overseers were afterwards appointed, who gave notice of prosecuting the appeal. Then at the following sessions the magistrates were of opinion that they ought to hear the appeal, they did so, and have decided on the merits; justice has been done, and I think we ought not to disturb their decision." The rest of the court concurred. Rule discharged; but without costs.

The parish of B. has no overseers of the poor, but contains several townships, separately maintaining their own poor, one of which is named B., and the other B. P. An order of removal was made to the parish of B., and the churchwarden of the parish of B. placed the pauper in the workhouse of the township of B. The pauper in fact belonged to the township of B. P.: Held, by Denman, C. J. and Littledale, J. (Taunton and Patteson, J. dubitantibus) that the township of B. had a right to appeal, and that the order of removal was bad.

Rex v. Bishop Wearmouth, 3 Nev. & M. 77; 5 B. & Ad. 942. Appeal against an order of removal from Botchergate to Bishop Wearmouth; and which was confirmed by sessions. Case:—The order of removal was made on the 28th of March, 1829, and the execution of it duly suspended; the suspension was taken off on the 12th of September, 1829, and a further order was then made by the magistrates on the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of Bishop Wearmouth to pay the sum of 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, being the expense incurred by the suspension of the said order of removal, to William Kidd or Luke Kidd, upon demand, the said Luke Kidd being the overseer of the township of Botchergate, and father of the said William Kidd. The parish of Bishop Wearmouth consists of seven townships, each maintaining its own poor separately, and having separate and distinct overseers. Two of these townships are called Bishop Wearmouth and Bishop Wearmouth Panns respectively; and in the latter the pauper and his family were legally settled. There are no overseers of the poor of the parish of Bishop Wearmouth. When the order of removal was made, both the magistrates who signed the same, and the overseers of the removing township, knew of the division of the parish of Bishop Wearmouth into townships, each maintaining its own poor, and that the pauper's settlement was in the township of Bishop Wearmouth Panns, though in the order of removal it was declared and adjudged by them to be in the parish of Bishop Wearmouth. The suspended order was not served till after the suspension was taken off; namely, on the 28th of September, 1829. The pauper and his children were taken by W. Kidd from the removing township to the township of Bishop Wearmouth Panns, with directions from the overseer of Botchergate to serve the order on and deliver the paupers to the overseer of the township of Bishop Wearmouth Panns, and to demand from him 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* W. Kidd accordingly, on the 28th of September, took the paupers to that township, and saw the overseer there, to whom he delivered the order, and demanded from him the above sum. The overseer of Bishop Wearmouth Panns stated that he believed the settlement of the paupers was in his township; but as the order of removal was not directed to the overseers of that township, but to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Bishop Wearmouth, he objected to it on account of its informality. Ultimately, however, he agreed, in order to save further expense and trouble, as he had no doubt of the paupers belonging to that township, that he would waive the objections he had taken to the order, if the overseer of the removing township would consent not to call for the 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* This proposal, however, not being acceded to, W. Kidd (to save expense) took the paupers to the workhouse of a neighbouring and distinct parish, leaving them as boarders; and returned home, taking with him the order of removal. The paupers remained there till the 22d of October following, when Luke Kidd, the overseer of the removing township, having paid for their board, took them with the same order to the same overseer of Bishop Wearmouth Panns as before, and again attempted to prevail upon him to accept the paupers and pay the money. This, however, he refused to do, for the same reasons he had before assigned, acknowledging at the same time that the paupers belonged to his township; whereupon Luke Kidd took the order to Mr. W. Hills, one of the churchwardens of the whole parish of Bishop Wearmouth, and who resided in the township of Bishop Wearmouth, and informed him of the refusal by the overseer of Bishop Wearmouth Panns to receive the paupers. Mr. Hills accompanied L. Kidd to try to prevail on the overseer of Bishop Wearmouth Panns to take the paupers. They found him at his place of business, situate in a distant parish (Sunderland), but he still refusing to receive the paupers, L. Kidd, the overseer of the removing township, served Mr. Hills, the churchwarden of the whole parish of Bishop Wearmouth, with the removal order, Hills being then in the parish of Sunderland; and the paupers were lodged by him in the workhouse of Bishop Wearmouth township, and maintained by that township till the appeal was heard. It was objected by the counsel for the respondents, that the churchwardens and overseers of the township of Bishop Wearmouth had no right of appeal, and were not entitled to be heard; but the court of quarter sessions determined that they were parties aggrieved, and entitled to appeal. The questions for the opinion of this court were, 1st, whether the township of Bishop Wearmouth was, under the circumstances, entitled to appeal; secondly, whether the order of removal, so directed and served as aforesaid, was, notwithstanding the objection made to it at the time of such service, a good, valid, and binding order or not. Denman, C. J. "Great pains have been taken to perplex this case by the magistrates and the officers of the removing township. No doubt it was the duty of the magistrates when they ascertained that the parish was divided into townships, and the settlement of the paupers was in one of those townships, to remove the paupers to the township bound to maintain them. If they had done so here there would be no dispute. But the order is to remove to the parish of Bishop Wearmouth generally, which, for the purpose of maintaining the poor, has no existence. Then the officer of the removing township sees the officer of the township to which the removal ought to have been made, and the latter objects to receive the pauper, because the order is to remove to the parish, unless the former will waive some costs; he refuses to do so. The paupers are then taken to the churchwarden of the whole parish of Bishop Wearmouth. He was not overseer of the township of Bishop Wearmouth, and as far as that township is concerned in the appeal, must be considered an entire stranger. He took the paupers with the order to another township which happens to be of the same name with the parish to which the removal was directed to be made. That township therefore had the paupers under an order directed to a parish of the same name: it was not bound to receive them, and was a volunteer to a certain extent; and the question is, whether it comes within the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 2, s. 2, which gives the right of appeal to all persons who think themselves aggrieved by any judgment of the justices. That clause, as it seems to me, ought not to be construed so as to let in any one who, taking a capricious view of the order, may think himself aggrieved by it, when it is clear that he was not intended to be included in it, but must be confined to those who may have reasonable ground for thinking themselves aggrieved. I think, however, that there was in this case reasonable ground for the inhabitants of Bishop Wearmouth to think they might suffer by this order, whereby the paupers were directed to be removed to a parish of the same name as the township, and that therefore they had a right to appeal. They might have a reasonable apprehension that they would be fixed with the pauper if they did not appeal, and, consequently, might think themselves aggrieved by the order. The appeal was heard, and the order of removal was confirmed on proof of a settlement in the township of Bishop Wearmouth Panns, the inhabitants of which, for the purpose of this appeal, must be considered as third persons. The sessions have clearly done wrong in this respect, and the order must be quashed." Littledale, J. "The order of sessions must evidently be quashed, because it confirms an order of removal to the parish of Bishop Wearmouth, and it appears clearly that the settlement of the pauper was in a township within the parish. It seems to me that the township of Bishop Wearmouth had a right to appeal. They had just reasons to apprehend that they would be fixed if they did not appeal. They therefore come within the words of the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 2. They had very good reason to think they might be injured by the order; for though the justices thereby directed the paupers to be removed to the parish of Bishop Wearmouth, the officers of the township of that name might suppose that the paupers must be maintained by some one of the townships within that parish, and that their township being of the same name as the parish, was the one intended by the justices. The order was not binding on Bishop Wearmouth Panns, because not directed to that township." Taunton, J. "The order of sessions is wrong, because the paupers were settled in Bishop Wearmouth Panns, and it was intended to remove them thither; but the sessions have confirmed an order removing them to the parish of Bishop Wearmouth, which does not maintain its own poor. This is not a mere verbal mistake, as in Rex v. Kirkby Stephen (Burr. S. C. 664, ante, 849), for the names of the parish and township are not the same, and the thing done was not according to the intention. But I have great doubt whether the inhabitants of the township of Bishop Wearmouth had reasonable cause to think themselves aggrieved. The statute does not give the right of appeal to every person, who, upon any inconsiderate view of his case, may think himself aggrieved, but only to persons who have reason to think themselves aggrieved. I am not satisfied that the appellant township would have been concluded by this order if they had not appealed against it. It never had been served on the officers of that township, nor was it served by the officers of the removing township. My doubt, however, is not so serious as to make me differ from the rest of the court." Patteson, J. "For the reasons already given, the sessions ought clearly to have quashed the order of removal. It is to be regretted that the magistrates should have ordered the paupers to be removed to a place where they were clearly not settled. Spitalfields v. Bromley (18 Vin. Ab. 468, tit. Removal, (H.) pl. 5, ante, 848), goes to this extent, that magistrates are not bound to notice the division of parishes into townships; and, therefore, if they do not know that a parish is so divided, and make an order directing a pauper to be removed to the parish, such an order may not be wrong. But if they are informed before they make the order that a parish is divided into townships maintaining their own poor separately, and that the settlement of the paupers is in one of those townships, it is their duty to direct the paupers to be removed to the township bound to maintain them. It seems to me also that the service of the order on the township of Bishop Wearmouth was not good. The order was directed to the churchwarden and overseers of the poor of the parish of Bishop Wearmouth, but there were no overseers of the poor of that parish. It was not served on the overseers of the township of Bishop Wearmouth, but of Bishop Wearmouth Panns. I doubt, therefore, whether the inhabitants of the township of Bishop Wearmouth had any right to appeal, because, not being bound to receive the paupers, they were, to a certain extent, volunteers. At the same time as the order was served on the churchwarden of the parish, who was in some respect the representative of all the townships within it, and he in fact placed the paupers in the workhouse of the township, the officers of the latter may be considered as having received and maintained the paupers under the order, and may have thought it obligatory on them so to do, and, consequently, that the township might be aggrieved by it. I therefore yield on this point (though not without much doubt) to the opinion of my lord and my brother Littledale." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Bingley, 2 Nev. & M. 103; 4 B. & Ad. 567. Appeal against an order of two justices removing Isabella Rushworth, widow, and her children, from Heslington, St. Lawrence, to Bingley. Order confirmed. Case:—The paupers were removed from Heslington, St. Lawrence, to the township of Bingley, under the above order. The parish of Bingley consists of several townships, of which the township of Bingley is one. The parish maintains its own poor collectively; and there are no separate overseers for the township of Bingley. The question was, whether the order of removal to the township of Bingley could be supported. Cur. adv. vult. Denman, C. J. now said (after referring to Rex v. The Justices of Carmarthen (1 Nev. & M. 368; 4 Bar. & Ad. 563), as in some degree analogous,) that the present order was informal, but might have been amended at the sessions; and that being so, the court thought that the case should go back to the sessions, that the amendment might be made."

1. Place from and to which an Order of Removal may be made.

Paupers were removed to the township of Bingley, the township does not maintain its own poor, but is in the parish of Bingley, which does: Held, that the order was informal, but the sessions might amend it.

Rex v. Swalcliffe, Cald. 248; 2 Bott, 786. An order of removal to Ascott, a large populous village, part of the parish of Whitchford, but maintaining its poor in common with Whitchford, is a mere nullity, and not conclusive, although unappealed from.

Removal to a village, a part of a parish, is void.

Rex v. Topsham, 7 East, 466. This was an order of removal from Topsham to "the parish of Poole, or town and county of Poole," and addressed to the churchwardens and overseers of "the parish of Poole, or town and county of Poole." There was in fact no such parish as the parish of Poole, but the town and county of Poole consisted but of one parish, and the name of that parish was St. James's in Poole. It was held, that it was no objection to the description of parish of the Poole, omitting the mention of its tutelary saint, there being but one parish in the town and county of Poole, and Poole being the common name of the place. And that the parish officers of Poole had themselves considered this description sufficient to call upon them to appeal to the sessions against the order, by whom the objection to the misnomer had been overruled.

Removal to the parish of Poole, being the common name, is sufficient.

2. ON THE COMPLAINT OF WHOM.

By the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1 (ante, 820), the justices are empowered to make an order of removal, "upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish, to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

2. On the complaint of whom.

The necessity of proceeding according to this provision of the statute has been long established.

Rex v. Hareby, Andr. 361; 2 Bott, 811. An order of removal did not set forth any complaint made. The court: "The complaint is the foundation of the jurisdiction of the justices; and therefore the order must be quashed."

Order of removal must set forth the complaint of the parish officers.

Western Rivers v. St. Peter's, 2 Salk. 492; 3 Salk. 254; 2 Bott, 803. Exception to an order of removal, in that it was said to be upon complaint only and not of the churchwardens or overseers. By the court: "This exception is fatal; for no one can disturb a man coming into a parish but they that have authority to do it. A complaint from one not concerned is nothing; it may be the parish is willing to keep him."

Spalding v. St. John Baptist, Fol. 267; 2 Bott, 639, &c. The order was, "To the churchwardens of Spalding, and to the churchwardens, &c. of St.

Complaint must be by the churchwardens or overseers.

3. To what Justices.

The removing justice must not be one of the complaining churchwardens.

John Baptist: whereas complaint hath been made by you ——" It was moved to quash the same for the uncertainty, because it did not say by which. But by Parker, C. J. "Sure that is well enough; for it is upon complaint of the right, if both complain."

3. TO WHAT JUSTICES.

Rex v. Great Yarmouth, 6 B. & C. 646; 9 D. & R. 682. Order of removal of R. Lenny from Woodbridge to Great Yarmouth, made on the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of Woodbridge. G. Thomas, one of the magistrates who signed the order, was one of the churchwardens of Woodbridge. Bayley, J. "I think there was no objection to this order of removal, on the ground of interest in the magistrate. The statute 16 Geo. II. c. 18, authorizes justices to act (in the case therein mentioned), notwithstanding they may be interested by reason of their being rateable. It is impossible to say that a churchwarden or overseer has any other interest in the removal of a pauper, except in his character of a rated inhabitant. He may, indeed, in the character of churchwarden, become liable to costs; but that responsibility can only attach to him, in consequence of his improperly removing the pauper. It is, therefore, against his interest to make any order of removal as far as costs are concerned; for, by so doing, he subjects himself to a responsibility which would not otherwise attach to him. But, I think that it is a fatal objection to this order, that the person who was the complainant heard and adjudicated upon the complaint. I cannot consider him as divested of the character of churchwarden at the time when the order was made. It purports to be made on the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers; and the statute 43 Elizabeth, c. 2, commits the management of the poor to the churchwardens and overseers. From the nature of the thing, the complaint must have been made by the churchwardens and overseers. Then, if the churchwardens made the complaint, the person who was one of the complainants heard and adjudicated upon it. Upon that ground, I think the order of removal was bad, and that the order of sessions confirming it ought to be quashed." Holroyd, J. "I also am of opinion that the order of removal is invalid, on the ground that the same person cannot, in point of law, be the complainant and the person hearing the complaint. The statute 16 Geo. II. c. 18, enacts, that magistrates, who, by reason of being rateable to the relief of the poor in any parish, are virtual parties to the complaint of chargeability upon which an order of removal is founded, shall be competent to act in the making of such order. In this case, the parish officers are not only virtual but acting parties to the complaint. Now, it is quite inconsistent that the same person should be a party to and a judge in a suit. The two characters are incompatible with each other. In this case, therefore, as one of the parties who made the order was churchwarden of the removing parish, and appears to have adjudicated upon a complaint to which he was a party, I think the order of removal was bad." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. The statute 16 Geo. II. c. 18, which enabled justices having an interest in the removal of a pauper, by reason of their being rateable in the parish, contemplated those cases only, where there was one set of persons to complain and another to adjudicate, viz. churchwardens and overseers, as persons distinct from the justices to whom the complaint is made." Order of sessions quashed.

The justices may act, though rated inhabitants, (see preceding case); but not when churchwarden or overseer.

The justices' authority must appear.

It must appear upon the face of the order, that the parties making it are justices of the peace; thus, in Walton v. Chesterfield (5 Mod. 322; 2 Bott, 775), an order was quashed, because it was only "whereas complaint hath been made unto us," without reciting their authority as justices.

Complaint may be to one justice, but the order of removal must be by two.

Rex v. Westwood, Sett. & Rem. 107; 1 Stra. 73; 2 Bott, 782. On complaint to one justice, two justices adjudge and remove; and it was held to be well. Otherwise, where one justice sets his hand to the order in the absence of the other.

Ware v. Stanstead Mount Filchet, 2 Salk. 488. Exception to an order, for that it was said, it appears upon examination before us or one of us. By the court: "The examination ought to be before both, because both are to make the judgment of removal." And Gould, J. said, "The statute directed, and the practice was, to make complaint to one justice, and he grants his warrant to bring the pauper before two justices, and then they two examine and remove." (See 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 4, ante, 825.)

Rex v. Wykes, Andr. 238; 2 Bott, 818. One justice took the examination, and other two justices removed upon that sole examination, and in the order set forth that the party was examined before themselves; for which, and for not summoning the party before them, an information was granted against the two justices.

But such an order signed by two justices is not void, and can be only set aside on appeal. (See Rex v. Cottingham, 4 Nev. & M. 215; 2 Ad. & El. 250, post; and Rex v. Stotfold, post, 858.)

Rex v. Hamstall Ridware, 2 Bott, 503, ante, 519. Whether it be necessary that two justices shall be together at the time, depends upon the circumstance whether the act to be done be judicial or merely ministerial.

Rex v. Coln St. Aldwin's, Burr. S. C. 136; 2 Bott, 673. The order of removal was made by two justices of Wiltshire, on an examination of the mother of the child removed taken before two justices of Middlesex, which had been transmitted to the justices of Wiltshire with an affidavit verifying that it was duly taken. In the order the justices of Wiltshire for themselves adjudged, "that it appears to them upon due examination and inquiry upon oath into the premises." Lee, C. J. "It is plain that these Wiltshire justices have grounded their adjudication upon the examination transmitted to them from the Middlesex justices. What they examined and inquired into upon oath, was the conveyance of the child out of one parish into the other. Now the examination on which they relied being taken by two justices of another county, and the person examined by those justices remaining still alive, for aught that appears to the contrary, it is plain this deposition ought not to have been received as evidence to ground their adjudication upon; though it might, perhaps, have been used as concurring evidence. I have often heard it declared here, and by Eyre, J. particularly, that both justices ought to be present at the vivâ voce examination of the witnesses." Page, J. "I remember a case where it was determined that both justices must be present; and that it is not sufficient for one justice to examine the matter and transmit it to the other, and that other to sign the order without examining into the matter himself. If the woman was alive, she ought to have been examined by these justices themselves. But even supposing that she was not alive, yet still I do not know that they could regard that Middlesex examination. It does not appear that the Middlesex justices had any jurisdiction, for no complaint appears to have been made before them; and if not, they could have no jurisdiction. The justices having set forth, though they were not bound to do it, the grounds of their adjudication, the court will judge of the sufficiency of them." Chapple, J. said, "That the justices founded this, their adjudication of the place of settlement, wholly upon the transmitted examination, which they ought not to have admitted at all."

Reg. v. Uplin, Sett. & Rem. 27. The order was quashed, because it did not say that they were justices of the peace but only justices of the county.

Rex v. Owlton, 2 Sess. Ca. 76; 2 Salk. 474. Exception was taken to an order for saying "unto us, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace in the county aforesaid;" for that by this it appears only that they lived in the county, and not that they were justices for that county: and the court held this to be a fatal exception, and quashed the order.

Rex v. Andover, Cald. 373; 2 Bott, 801. Exception was taken to an order, that the magistrates stated themselves to be "two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the borough or town and parish of Andover," &c. Order quashed for irregularity upon the face of it. It was contended that the order was uncertain; they may be justices for the town and not for the borough, or for the borough and not for the town; but certainly not for both,

3. To what Justices.

One justice may order a pauper to be brought up; but two must be present at the examination.

Examination must be by the justices who remove.

The justices of one county cannot make an order of removal on an examination taken by the justices of another county.

Both justices ought to be present at the examination.

To be justices of the peace.

And to be for the county, &c.; in the county not sufficient.

Justices of the borough or town and parish sufficient.

3. To what Justices.

It need not appear that they are justices of the division.

An order of magistrates was directed to the parish of W. in the county of Rutland, and also to the parish of M. in the county of Leicester, and the words "county of Rutland," were then written in the margin, and the magistrates were in a subsequent part of the order described as justices of the peace for the county aforesaid: Held, that it thereby sufficiently appeared that they were justices for the county of Rutland. (a) nor does it appear for which. Buller, J. "Whether for one or the other enough appears to support the order; for both town and borough are coupled with parish. And they sufficiently appear to be justices of either of those places for which they were empowered to make this order." Lord Mansfield, C. J. and Willes, J. concurring, (Ashhurst, J. absent,) order of sessions quashed.

Anon., 2 Salk. 473; 2 Bott, 795. It was objected to an order, that it did not appear thereby that the justices were of the division, which is required by the statute. But this objection was over-ruled, for that the statute therein is only directory.

Rex v. St. Mary's, Leicester, 1 B. & A. 327. Removal from Wing in the county of Rutland to St. Mary's in the borough of Leicester. Order confirmed. Both orders being removed by certiorari, a rule was obtained calling on the parish officers of Wing to show cause why they should not be quashed for a default of jurisdiction in the magistrates making the original order, apparent on the face of it, in not stating them to be justices of the peace of the county of Rutland. The order was: "County of Rutland. To the churchwardens and overseers of Wing in the said county, and to the churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary's in the borough of Leicester in the county of Leicester. Rutland to wit. Upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of Wing in the said county, made unto us whose names are hereunto set and seals affixed, being two of his Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, and one of us of the quorum, that Mary Bacon, &c. are come to inhabit, &c. (pursuing the usual form of such orders)."
Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If this court is put under the painful necessity of over-ruling Rex v. Moor Critchell (infra, note), in order to do justice in this case, I have no hesitation in so doing. The words 'justices of the peace in and for the said county,' in that case immediately follow the words 'the county of Wilts aforesaid,' and in plain grammatical construction can have reference to the county of Wilts only. For the word said must have reference to the last antecedent, and I wish that the very able and learned judge who decided that case, instead of lamenting that such an objection had there been taken, had applied his powerful mind to the objection itself, and I have no doubt that it would have vanished before that mind exerting its proper vigour on the subject. Here there is first, 'County of Rutland,' in the margin, then come the words 'parish of Wing in the said county;' that must mean the county of Rutland, if we are to give the word said any meaning at all. Then immediately follow the words 'justices of the peace for the said county;' that must, therefore, also have a reference to the county of Rutland. The grammatical construction and plain meaning of the instrument direct us to that conclusion alone."
Bayley, J. "It is impossible to doubt in this case to what county the magistrates who made this order belonged. Rex v. Moor Critchell is undoubtedly a very strong authority, and perhaps not distinguishable from this case; but that case does not convince me. I think the court ought there to have come to a contrary conclusion. In that case the words 'said county' could only mean, in grammatical construction and common sense, the county of Wilts. Now here, 'said county' must mean Rutland and not Leicester. Besides, in this case, after the direction of the order, there are found in the margin the words 'county of Rutland, to wit,' which make the case much stronger. Then, if there be no unto us, whose hands and seals are hereunto subscribed and set, being two of his Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, &c." it was contended that the order was bad for a default of jurisdiction in the magistrates making the order, apparent upon the face of it, in not stating them to be justices of the peace of the county of Wilts. Lord Kenyon held the objection to be fatal.

(a) Rex v. Moor Critchell, 2 East, 66. The order was, "Wilts, to wit. To the churchwardens, &c. of Donhead, St. Mary, in the county of Wilts, aforesaid, to remove; and to the churchwardens, &c. of Moor Critchell, in the county of Dorset, to receive, these:—Whereas, complaint hath been made by you, the churchwardens, &c. of Donhead, St. Mary, in the county of Wilts, aforesaid,

doubt to which county the word said refers, the objection cannot prevail." Abbott, J. "The Rex v. Moor Critchell was a decision, not establishing any general rule of law, but turning upon the construction of the terms of that particular instrument, and has not, I believe, been since recognised or acted upon. Even if this case were precisely similar to that, I should say that the court there had not adopted the true construction, nor that which was warranted by the ordinary rules of criticism or language. Here, however, there is a distinction; the county here is named, for the second time, in the margin, and we may therefore begin to read the instrument from that part; if so, there will be no doubt; for the county of Rutland is the only county named to which the word said can have any reference." Holroyd, J. concurred. Order affirmed.

In Rex v. Childerscotten (8 T. R. 178, post), the order was similar, except that there was no county named in the margin; the order was held to be void, though unappealed against. (See Rex v. Courtisthorpe, 2 B. & Ad. 487.)

Orders formerly have been quashed for not setting forth that one of the justices was of the quorum; but now, by 26 Geo. II. c. 27, no order shall be set aside for that defect only. But if neither of the justices be, in fact, of the quorum, it seems (except in the cases hereafter mentioned, by 7 Geo. III. c. 21; 4 Geo. IV. c. 27,) that such order will not be good; for the statute requires that one of them shall actually be of the quorum, though it dispenses with the necessity of setting that forth in the order. And there are many towns corporate whose charters have no quorum, but only constitute certain of the chief officers justices to keep the peace. That is to say, they have the power which the justices of the county at large have, by the first assignment in the commission of the peace. The power of hearing and determining, which they have now by the second assignment in the commission, and which only implies a quorum, is a separate and distinct authority, and was superadded to the former some years after the institution of the office of the justices of the peace. (See tit. "Justices," Vol. III.)

And by 7 Geo. III. c. 21, if in any city, borough, town corporate, franchise, or liberty, they have one (and no more than one) justice actually of the quorum, all acts, orders, adjudications, warrants, indentures of apprenticeship, or other instruments done or executed by two or more justices, qualified to act within such city or other place, shall be valid, although neither of the justices shall be of the quorum.

And further, by 4 Geo. IV. c. 27, reciting the last mentioned statute, "And whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said act should be extended to such cities and other jurisdictions as have two or any other limited number of justices of the quorum qualified to act within the same:" be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where the number of justices of the peace for any city, borough, town corporate, franchise, liberty or other local jurisdiction, is limited, and any one, two or more of such justices only are of the quorum, all acts, orders, adjudications, warrants, indentures of apprenticeship, or other instruments, which shall be made, done or executed, either in or out of the general quarter sessions or petty sessions, or any adjournment thereof, by virtue of any charter or grant, or by virtue of any act of parliament made or to be made, by any two or more justices of the peace acting within the same, though neither of the said justices be of the quorum, shall be valid in law, to all intents and purposes, as if the said justices had been of the quorum; any grant, charter, law or custom to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

Albrighton v. Skipton, 1 Stra. 300; 2 Bott, 797. Upon an appeal from an order of removal made by two justices, one of the quorum: the sessions, reciting that they had perused the charter of Albrighton, and it not appearing thereby that the two justices were either of them of the quorum, therefore they quashed the order. But by the court: "The order of sessions must be quashed; not for want of any power in the sessions to look into the jurisdiction of the two justices, for that they certainly have; but because that want of jurisdiction is not sufficiently alleged; since they might have a jurisdiction, though it did not appear upon the charter of Albrighton. The sessions should have said in general, that it appeared to them that the two justices were neither of them of the quorum, and that would have been good cause to quash the order of the two justices."

4. Of the Examination.

4. OF THE EXAMINATION.

Before the order of removal is issued, an examination must be made, and this examination should be made and drawn up with great care, as in the event of an appeal against the order, the removing parish cannot give evidence of any ground of removal, except those stated in the examination. See sect. 8 of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, Appendix. (a)

One justice may issue his warrant to summon the pauper to be examined concerning his settlement. (See form, post, Appendix.) Witnesses may also be summoned for the like purpose. (See also form, post, Appendix.) And it is very advisable that the overseers and churchwardens of the parish, to which it is proposed to remove the pauper, be summoned to attend the examination. (See form of summons, post, Appendix.)

Due examination or consideration sufficient.

Munger-Hunger v. Warden, 2 Sess. Ca. 40; 2 Bott, 817. Exception was taken to an order, for that it was said to be made upon due examination, without saying upon oath. But by the court: "This is sufficient; for if it is said to be made upon due examination, it shall be understood to be upon oath, though the statute directs the examination to be upon oath."

Rex v. Fisherton Delamore, Sess. Ca. 45. "Upon due consideration" was held sufficient, for that implies due examination.

Examination taken and order signed by two justices separately, is not void but only voidable on appeal.

Rex v. Stotfold, 4 T. R. 596. M. Shaw and family were removed from Stotfold to Chilvers. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was born at Stotfold, but his father's settlement was at Chilvers Coton, and the pauper had never gained any settlement in his own right, except as follows: He and his family were in 1776 removed from Sandon to Stotfold in the usual form, and were delivered to the parish officers of Stotfold, who received them, and did not appeal. The pauper and his family have ever since, till the present removal, occasionally resided in and been relieved by Stotfold. It was then proved by the respondents (but which evidence was objected to by the appellants, but over-ruled by the court), that the order of removal from Sandon to Stotfold, and the examination on which it was founded, were in fact taken and signed by the two justices separately, and not in the presence of each other, and that one of them, though a magistrate for the county of Hertford, took the examination and signed the order at his own house, situate in that part of Royston, which lies in Cambridgeshire, Royston lying partly in each county. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "That he was not then prepared to state from his papers the reasons at length upon which their judgment was founded, but that he had thoroughly and attentively considered the question; and that the result of his deliberations and of the rest of the court was, that the former order was only voidable, not absolutely void; and therefore that it was necessary for the parish who wished to avoid it to have appealed against it in a regular course of proceedings; that it would be extremely inconvenient to permit a parish to set aside an order of removal at any distance of time, which had been acquiesced under for years without any dispute; and that a distinction had always prevailed between void and voidable instruments; a strong instance of which was, that on the construction of the statute Westminster 2, c. 1, which, though it enacts that all fines contrary to that act shall be ipso jure null, has been held to mean only voidable by some legal proceeding." Order of sessions confirmed. (See also Rex v. Wykes, Andr. 238, post, 862.)

If two justices take the examination of a pauper relative to his settlement, but do not remove him, and the

Rex v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707. Order of removal of John Sharp from Icklingham, All Saints, to Eriswell, confirmed. Case:—Examination of the pauper in 1779 was taken before two justices, upon the overseers of Icklingham taking him to be examined as to his settlement; his examination was taken upon oath before those justices, and signed by the pauper; by which examination it appeared that he had gained a settlement by hiring and service for a year in Eriswell, and had done no act to gain a settlement elsewhere. No proceedings were had in consequence of this examination until this order of removal was applied for and made. [N. B. The two justices who made the order of removal were not the same two justices who took the examination.] The pauper, from the time of the examination being taken, continued to reside at Icklingham for about five years, without being chargeable to that parish, when he became insane, and so continues. His examination was offered in evidence, and objected to, but received. The evidence, exclusive of the said examination, was not sufficient to warrant the determination. The judges gave their opinions at great length. Ashhurst and Buller, Js. were for confirming, and Lord Kenyon, C. J. and Grose, J. were for quashing the orders; but there not being a majority of the court of opinion that the rule for reversing the orders should be made absolute, they consequently stood confirmed.

Where a pauper is too infirm to be brought before the justices at their petty sessions, a justice is authorized by the 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 4, to take the examination, and report to another justice. (See the section, ante, 825.)

Rex v. South Lynn, All Saints, 4 M. & Sel. 354. Removal of E. Smith, widow, and her children, from St. Margaret's to South Lynn, All Saints. Order confirmed. Case:—The order was founded upon the examination of the pauper, taken before one justice, and reported to the other, pursuant to 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 4. The pauper, being at the time of her examination sick and unable to travel, the justices suspended the order. The question was, whether this order was void, as it omitted to set out that the examination was taken before one justice only, and was reported to the other justice, so as to show the particular jurisdiction and authority of the justices under the statute? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The justices have no jurisdiction at the common law, but only what is given to them by statute; and the argument is as if this were a proceeding contrary to the common law. It seems to me that the statute in question does not make it necessary for the justices to state the proceedings had under it in their order." Le Blanc, J. "The statute enacts, that in case the pauper is by age or other infirmity unable to be brought up to be examined as to his settlement, it shall be lawful for one magistrate to take his examination and report it to another, and for those magistrates, upon such report, to adjudge the settlement; but I do not find that the statute makes any alteration in the form of the order." Per curiam: order confirmed.

In Rex v. Nuneham Courtney, 1 East, 373, the order was confirmed by the sessions, and it was stated that the pauper had absconded between the notice of appeal and the then next sessions, and could not be heard of; that the respondent parish of Burcot offered in evidence an examination in writing of the pauper, which examination was first taken upon the oath of the pauper on the 4th of June, 1799, by one magistrate, upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of Burcot, and to the truth of the contents of which examination the pauper then made oath before the justices, who thereupon made the order on that same day. But no person was present belonging to Nuneham Courtney; whereupon the appellants objected to the admissibility of this evidence; but the court over-ruled the objection. But the Court of King's Bench, without hearing counsel, expressed a decided opinion against the admissibility of such evidence, and quashed both orders.

Rex v. Ferry Frystone, otherwise Ferry Bridge, 2 East, 54. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, Catherine Hill, deposed, "That she was the widow of John Hill, and that she had heard John in his life-time say that his settlement was at Ferry Bridge, which he said he gained by hiring with and serving one J. Hawkeshead, a bricklayer, in Ferry Bridge, for a year." The following examination was also given in evidence. The examination of John Hill, late in the royal artillery, now residing at Kilnwick, taken upon pauper afterwards dies or becomes insane, Quære, whether two other justices may remove his family on it? (See Rex v. Warminster, 3 B. & Ald. 121, post, 861.)

Such an order of removal need not state the special circumstances of taking the examination.

An examination of a pauper for the purpose of removal, is not evidence upon an appeal against that order of removal, though the pauper cannot be found.

oath this 15th day of April, 1788, who saith, "That his legal settlement is at Ferry Bridge; that he acquired the same by servitude; namely, by being hired for one whole year, and serving the said year with J. H., bricklayer, of Ferry Bridge; and that he hath not gained any legal settlement elsewhere since, to the best of his knowledge and belief." (Signed and attested.) No proceedings were had in consequence of this examination until the order was made. Ferry Frystone and Ferry Bridge were the same township. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The point upon which the court were divided in opinion in Rex v. Eriswell (ante, 858,) has been since considered to be so clear against the admissibility of the evidence, either as to the hearsay of the pauper or his examination in writing, that it was abandoned by the counsel at the bar in Rex v. Nuneham Courtney (ante, 859,) without argument. It is true there was no evidence there that the pauper, whose examination had been admitted in evidence, was dead; but our opinion against the general doctrine laid down by the two judges who supported the reception of the evidence in the former case was pretty broadly hinted; and to be sure, that point may now be considered to be at rest. Per curiam: both orders quashed.

Rex v. Abergwilly, 2 East, 63. It was also settled that an ex parte examination in writing of a pauper, touching his settlement, cannot be received in evidence of such settlement, though he be dead.

Stat. 5 Will. IV. c. 5, s. 70 (a), (the mutiny act), enacts, "That any justice in the United Kingdom, within whose jurisdiction any soldier in the regular army or the permanent staff of the militia, having a wife or child, shall be billeted, may summon such soldier before him in the place where he is billeted, which summons he is hereby directed to obey, and to take his examination in writing upon oath, touching the place of his last legal settlement in England, and such justice shall give an attested copy of such examination to the person examined, to be by him delivered to his commanding officer, to be produced when required; which said examination, and such attested copy, shall be at any time admitted in evidence as to such last legal settlement, before any justice, or at any general or quarter sessions, although such soldier be dead or absent from the kingdom: provided that in case any soldier shall be again summoned to make oath as aforesaid, then on such examination, or such attested copy thereof, being produced by him or by any other person on his behalf, such soldier shall not be obliged to take any other oath with regard to his legal settlement, but shall leave a copy of such examination, or a copy of such attested copy of examination, if required.

Rex v. Clayton Le Moors, 5 T. R. 704. The examination of the pauper, taken under the mutiny act, was the evidence relied on. The witness stated that the paper produced was a true copy examined by himself with another paper, which witness saw in the office of W. Addington, London. W. A. was the name of the justice who signed the original. He saw W. A. subscribe his name to the paper produced. He did not know the pauper, nor was he present at the original examination. The sessions refused to receive it. Lord Kenyon. "It is not necessary to say here whether or not the original is evidence; it is sufficient for the determination of this case to say that the copy of the examination tendered in evidence is not the copy which the act directs to be received in evidence." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Warley, 6 T. R. 534. It was determined that the original examination is evidence; and Lord Kenyon added, "That on this question it was impossible to doubt; the proposition attempted in this case is, that the attested copy is of more weight than the original examination; but it is fair to conclude that the legislature, when they made the inferior species of writing evidence, also intended to make the superior evidence."

(a) The terms of the annual Mutiny Act seldom vary. The words "although such soldier be dead or absent from the kingdom," were not contained in the similar statute of 1 Geo. IV. c. 19; and in the last mentioned statute the words were "any non-commissioned officer or soldier."

Rex v. Bilton with Harrowgate, 1 East, 13. An examination under the act was produced. The witness stated that he received it from the overseer of the respondent parish, but he was not called. No proof was given that the persons who signed it were magistrates, or that the signatures were the signatures of the said persons; and it was held that the examination must be authenticated before it could be received, and does not prove itself prima facie, though the paper is in the form prescribed by the statute.

Rex v. Warminster, 3 B. & Ald. 121. Abbott, C. J. "It has been contended that the words 'at any time' do not mean at a time when the pauper was either absent from this country, or when he was dead. I cannot however find any thing in the act from which I can infer that it was the intention of the legislature to restrain those words to the life of the pauper, or during his residence in this country. On the contrary it seems to me that it may have been the intention of the legislature to preserve the memorial of the evidence of the settlement of a person whose life is exposed to more than ordinary risk. I think therefore the examination ought to have been received in evidence." Order of sessions quashed. In the Mutiny Act, 5 Geo. IV. c. 13, and also in the 1 Geo. IV. c. 6, it is expressly provided that the examination and attested copy shall be evidence, although such soldier be dead or absent from the kingdom.

Rex v. All Saints, Southampton, 7 B. & C. 785; 1 M. & R. 663; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 351. E. Carden was removed from Romsey Extra to All Saints, Southampton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was the widow of Richard Roe Carden, deceased; and to establish his settlement the respondents duly proved the following paper:—

"Town of Romsey Infra, in the } The examination of Richard Roe Carden, a county of Southampton. } private soldier in his majesty's 25th regiment of foot, taken on oath before us, two of his majesty's justices of the peace for the said town, the 6th day of April, 1782, touching the place of his last legal settlement.
The said examinant on his oath saith, that he was born in the parish of Romsey Infra, as he hath heard and verily believes, where his father was a settled parishioner; that about fifteen years ago last harvest, he hired himself as a covenant servant for a year to David Pallant, of the parish of All Saints, in the town and county of Southampton, esq. at the wages of 4*l.*, and in consequence thereof he entered into the service of the said David Pallant, and served him there till about Christmas following, when this examinant went with his master and his family to London, where he staid with him about three months, when he returned with his said master to the said parish of All Saints, and continued in his said master's service there during the remainder of the said year, and at the expiration thereof he received his full year's wages, and that he hath never done any act since to his knowledge, whereby to gain a settlement; and that he hath a wife named Elizabeth, and one child named Moses, aged two years and upwards.

(Signed)

Richard Roe Carden.

Sworn the day and year above mentioned, before us,

Thomas Dawkins."

It was objected, that it did not appear on the face of it that at the time the examination was taken, the soldier was quartered in the town of Romsey Infra. The court however found the paper to be a due examination under the Mutiny Act. Bayley, J. "In this case I think there is not enough to make the examination evidence. The Mutiny Act gives a special power in certain cases; but for the statute this examination would be extra-judicial. By that statute, (a) if any non-commissioned officer or soldier shall have wife, child, or children, two justices may summon him where he is quartered, to make oath of the place of his last legal settlement, who shall obey such summons, and make oath accordingly: and the justice shall give an attested copy of such affidavit, to be delivered to the commanding officer, to be pro-

The examination must be authenticated by proof of signatures of justices, and that they were justices.

The examination is receivable in evidence, though the soldier is dead or absent.

The examination is not admissible unless on the face of it it appears that the soldier was quartered within the jurisdiction of the justices.

Quære, whether this fact must not proceed aliunde?

(a) 22 Geo. III. c. 4. And see 5 Geo. IV. c. 13, s. 72, by which the power of examination is given to one justice, and both the examination and the attested copy are directed to be admitted in evidence.

duced when required, which attested copy shall be at any time admitted in evidence as to such settlement, before any justices, or at any sessions; and if he be summoned again to make such oath as aforesaid, then on such attested copy of the oath by him formerly taken being produced, he shall not be obliged to take any other or further oath with regard to his settlement, but shall leave a copy of such attested copy of examination if required. The justices therefore have no jurisdiction, except in the case of a soldier, nor unless the soldier is quartered within their jurisdiction. In the Banbury Peerage case, it was resolved, in 1809, by the judges, on a question put to them by the house of lords, that a bill in equity, or depositions, cannot be received in evidence against a party not claiming under the plaintiff or defendant in the chancery suit. Here the facts constituting the jurisdiction, namely, that the examinant is a soldier, and quartered within the jurisdiction, must be shown either aliundè or ex visceribus. I think it should have been made out aliundè. In Rex v. Warminster (ante, 861,) it was proved aliundè that the party was a soldier, and quartered within the jurisdiction. Here it merely appears upon the face of the examination, and you would make the examination proof of facts giving the jurisdiction. But even these facts are not represented to have been stated on oath; they are merely introduced as part of the description of the examinant. We are asked to supply by construction and intendment that which must at least have been proved before the justices. In Rex v. Gouche (a) the court said, that they would presume jurisdiction; but that decision was overruled in Rex v. Halling, (b) and Rex v. Hulcott, (c) in the last of which cases Lord Kenyon upon full consideration says, 'As it does not appear on the face of this order that the justice had jurisdiction, the pauper was not legally discharged from her service. There is no material distinction in principle between this case and cases of orders. If it were sufficient to state the jurisdiction upon the face of an order, there would be no difficulty here. If that be not sufficient, there must be proof aliundè to make the examination evidence.' Here the facts necessary to give the jurisdiction are not all stated upon the face of the instrument, nor are they proved aliundè. Holroyd, J. "The distinction between courts of special and general jurisdiction is laid down in Miller v. Seare, (d) and though that case is overruled (e) as to the point there decided, that an action would lie against commissioners of bankrupt for a wrongful commitment, that distinction is well established. The rule, omnia præsumuntur ritè esse acta, does not apply to the facts which constitute the jurisdiction. In a plea of justification all the facts which show the jurisdiction must be stated, and they must also be proved. Here those facts neither appear on the face of the document nor are shown aliundè. It is therefore not necessary to decide whether it would have been sufficient if the facts had appeared on the face of the document. The case referred to, with regard to wages in husbandry, (e) is directly in point." Order of sessions quashed.

The pauper himself ought to be summoned and heard.

Rex v. Wykes, Andr. 238; 2 Bott, 819. A person ought to be summoned, and be heard before he be removed; for he may produce a certificate, or give other sufficient security, or show cause otherwise why he ought not to be removed; especially as he himself perhaps by the removal is likely to be the greatest sufferer; and therefore natural justice requires that he be not condemned unheard.

It is not necessary in all cases that the pauper himself should be examined.

But in Rex v. Bagworth, Cald. 179; 2 Bott, 644, objection was taken to the order, that it did not appear to have been made upon proper evidence; that it was made only upon examination of the premises; that the pauper himself must be examined; and was so holden in Rex v. Wykes. But by the court: "It cannot be necessary in all cases that the pauper should be examined. In that of an infant of tender years it would be impossible. There is no such general rule. The case in Comberbach, 478, is in point: in that case Holt, C. J., says, 'If it can be, 'tis fit it should be so, but not absolutely necessary'." See Rex v. Everdon (post, 871), where Lord Ellenborough speaks to the law of this case.

Rex v. Jackson, 1 T. R. 653. A rule was obtained for an information against justices of Kendal, for committing a pauper to prison, whom they were examining relative to his settlement, for not answering a particular question. Under which commitment he continued in prison for thirteen days, which it was contended was so manifestly illegal, that they must have known they were exceeding their authority, and therefore that it must be intended that they acted from corrupt motives. But it appearing on reading the affidavits on both sides, that no corrupt motives were to be imputed to the defendants, the rule was discharged. Ashhurst, J. said, "He would not then decide whether magistrates have, or have not, a power to commit a pauper for refusing to answer proper questions put to him in the course of his examination. They certainly have a right to examine a pauper touching his settlement; and yet that would only be a shadow of a right, unless they had likewise a power of enforcing that examination, by committing the pauper for refusing to be examined." Buller, J. said, "With regard to the power of commitment, he did not know how justices were to act, unless they had such a power. This commitment, 'until he should answer,' he thought right; and though the pauper continued in prison under the commitment thirteen days, that will not make the case stronger against the defendants. The party committed for refusing to be examined is to clear himself, and when he will answer must give notice to the magistrates. This is like the case of a commitment by the commissioners of a bankrupt, where the party committed must send word when he will submit and answer the questions." Rule discharged.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 28, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace, to take in writing the examination on oath of any person having a wife, or child, who shall be a prisoner in any gaol or house of correction, or in the custody of the keeper of any such gaol or house of correction, or who shall be in the custody of any constable, or other peace officer, by virtue of any warrant or commitment, touching the place of his or her last legal settlement; and such examination shall be signed by such justice taking the same, and shall be received and admitted in evidence as to such settlement before any justices, for the purposes of any order of removal, so long only as the person so examined shall continue a prisoner."

4. Of the Examination.

A pauper refusing to be examined, justices may commit him.

Examination of prisoners to their settlements made evidence.

5. THE FORM OF THE ORDER OF REMOVAL. (a)

We have seen what are the principal requisites of these orders, ante, 820 to 863. We will now notice some of the formal parts.

5. The Form of the Order of Removal.

1. The County and Date of Order.

It must appear distinctly in the order in what county it is made, and to name the county in the margin, without any statement in the body of the order, that the place is in such county, or in any words of reference, as in the said county, or in the county aforesaid, will not be sufficient. (Sett. & Rem. 151: 2 Sess. Ca. 181.)

1. The County and Date of Order.

The county must appear in the order.

Rex v. St. Stephenson, 1 Barnard. 177, 196. There was an order of removal by the justices of the town of Bedford, from the parish of St. Peter's in Bedford, to the parish of St. Stephenson, in the county of Bedford, and it was only said in the margin the town of Bedford, without mentioning in what county. It was moved to quash this order; and insisted, that it was necessary to mention what county this Bedford lay in, because the appeal must be to the justices of that county where it lies. And the court was of this opinion, but did not quash the order, by reason of a flaw in the certiorari, by which it was removed.

(a) See the Forms, post, Appendix.

5. Of the Order of Removal.

Distinction between orders and indictments.

2. The Description of the Paupers.

Pauper to be named, if known; if not, say whose name is unknown.

An order cannot remove more parties than complained of.

An order to remove a man and his family is bad.

Children should be described by name, and seem age.

Not necessary to state the age of the children.

Must adjudge the settlement of a child of ten years.

The order must set forth the ages of children, unless their settlement is adjudicated.

Rex v. Holbeck in Leeds, Burr. S. C. 198; 2 Bott, 864. The borough of Leeds was in the margin, and the direction was, to the churchwardens, &c. of Holbeck, in the said borough. And by the court. "That is well enough. and the distinction is, betwixt orders and indictments. In orders, the margin is to be considered as a part of the order, and a clear plain reference to it is sufficient; but in indictments, the county must be expressed in the body, and a reference to the margin is not sufficient."

2. The Description of the Paupers.

The name of the person, if known, (a) must be stated in the order, and where children are included they must be separately named, and their ages stated, unless the order specially adjudge the place to which the removal is made to be their last place of legal settlement; nor can more than one person, and those who derive their settlement from such person, as wife or children, be included in one order. If the order state the age of any child removed with his parent at more than seven years, it may set forth that the child has not gained a settlement in his own right, or adjudge the place removed to is his settlement.

Southwell v. Needwell, Sett. & Rem. 57; 2 Bott, 760. "Whereas a certain woman hath intruded, these are therefore to require you to convey:" Objection, it is not said who this woman was. Parker, C. J. "You must either name her, or say a certain woman unknown."

Rex v. Newington, Sett. & Rem. 45; 2 Bott, 760. Whereas J. S. hath intruded into the parish of A. and is likely to become chargeable; these are therefore to require you to remove him with three children. The court quashed this order, for the justices have removed more than is complained of.

Johnson's case, 2 Salk. 485; 2 Bott, 837. Order to remove a man, his wife, and family, from Brood to Sandhurst, not good, because too general; for some of the family might not be removable, they might have a settlement in Brood, though Johnson had not.

Beaston v. Scisson, 1 Stra. 114. Order for removal of Thomas Block and his family; upon the first reading quashed as to the family, because too general.

Flixton v. Royston, 1 Sess. Ca. 11; Fol. 278. Order to remove Jane Smith and her five children, quashed as to the children, for the uncertainty; because it neither tells the names nor ages of the children; for she might have more children than five, and some of those five might have gained settlements.

Ringmore v. Petworth, Sett. & Rem. 41. The order was, "Whereas such a person and his three children are likely to become chargeable, and their last legal settlement was at Ringmore." It was moved to quash the same, because the children's ages were not set forth. But by the court: "It is not necessary in this case; for the order says, they were last legally settled in Ringmore, and then no matter what their ages are."

Hobey v. Kingsbury, 1 Stra. 527. Two justices adjudging the settlement of the husband to be at Kingsbury, and that he is likely to become chargeable to Hobey, send him, his wife, and son of one year old, to Kingsbury: and whether this was good as to the wife and child was the question: And it was held to be well enough. Order confirmed.

Rex v. Middleham, Fol. 271. Order to remove a child, of the age of ten years, to Middleham, because Middleham was the place where his father was last legally settled, quashed by the court; because there was no adjudication that Middleham was the place of the child's last legal settlement, and at that age it might have gained a settlement.

Rex v. Trinity in Chester, 2 Sess. Ca. 74; 2 Bott, 867. This rule was laid down: Every order that concerns the removal of a father and his children ought to show the ages of the children; for they may have gained a settlement in some other right, as by being apprentices or servants; therefore their age ought to be set forth, that it may appear to the court, that by reason of their infancy they have not gained any settlement in their own right, but have only a relative settlement from their father. Seven years is an age that the court will presume a child could gain a settlement at, in his own right: but if it appears upon the order that the child was above seven years old, the order must set forth that such child hath not gained a settlement in his own right.

Rex v. Bowling, Burr. S. C. 177. The order removed the father and children (without setting forth their ages) from Bradford to Bowling, and adjudged Bowling to be the place of the father's last legal settlement. By the court: "The established rule is, that where the children are sent in consequence of their father's settlement, either the ages of the children must be set out (to show that they are of such tender years as not to have gained a settlement for themselves); or there must be an express adjudication of their having gained no other settlement. Therefore it is bad as to the children."

Chewton v. Compton Martin, 1 Stra. 471. An order made by two justices for the removal of two different families, was quashed by the sessions; and in support of the decision of the sessions, it was argued that the removal of one might be legal, and of the other illegal; and then upon an appeal to the sessions against the order generally, there would be great difficulty as to costs, the 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, giving costs to the parish in whose favour the appeal is determined, because it could not be said that the order is reversed, because it stands good as to part, and it cannot be said to be confirmed, because it was not held good as to the whole. Eyre and Fortescue, Js., were of opinion that the order was ill, giving this further reason, that the party removed had a right to appeal, for it may be that he was removed from his own estate, and then, upon his appeal, it will consequently draw over the other matter, in which, perhaps, the parties on all sides acquiesce. Order of sessions confirmed.

Reg. v. Graffham, Sett. & Rem. 16; 2 Bott, 808. The order sets forth, that Henry Tate and his wife do endeavour to intrude into the parish; and quashed by the court; for that he cannot be removed out of the parish, unless he hath come into it.

5. Form of Order of Removal.

Different persons cannot be removed by the same order upon independent settlements.

Must have come to inhabit.

3. Of the being Chargeable. (a)

We have already had occasion to consider some of the circumstances that render a person chargeable. And by the 56 s. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, (see App.) all relief given on account of the wife or child under the age of 16, not being blind, or deaf and dumb, shall be considered as relief given to the husband or father; and relief given on account of such child of a widow shall be considered as given to the widow. And by the 57th sect. the husband is liable for the maintenance of the children, legitimate or illegitimate, of his wife, from before his marriage, and is chargeable with all relief, or the cost price thereof, until the child is 16 years of age, or the mother dies.

Before this statute, relief to any unemancipated child was considered as relief given to the parent. And in Rex v. Mile-End (ante, 841,) the judge declined to give an opinion as to the effect of this statute upon relief given to a child above the age of 16 years. As a general rule, a statute will not be so construed as to operate as a repeal of the previous law, unless its provisions are inconsistent with it. But it may be observed that there was no distinct authority for the position, that relief given to an unemancipated child rendered the parent chargeable, and the object of the statute might have been to introduce a sensible and definite rule on the subject; and unless this was the object, the section will be of little importance, and will be applicable to those cases only (which are of rare occurrence) where the child receiving relief has been emancipated under the age of 16. If this section should be considered as declaratory, one effect will be, that relief given to a child under the age of 16, if the child is blind, or deaf and dumb, will not render the parent chargeable.

Rex v. Bradford, Sett. & Rem. 40. Likely to become chargeable, (a) but not said to what parish. Quashed.

St. Nicholas, Gloucester, v. St. Peter's, Bristol, 2 Sess. Ca. 73. Upon an order of removal of Mary White, the reciting part of it was, "Whereas the pauper was likely to become chargeable to the parish of St. Nicholas:" but in the adjudicating part it was only said, that she was likely to become chargeable, without saying to the parish of St. Nicholas. The court allowed this to be a good exception, and said they would not take these orders to be good by intendment; for the court will not intend a jurisdiction in the justices, where they do not entitle themselves to it on the face of the order.

Rex v. Bourn, Burr. S. C. 39. The complaint was, that the pauper was likely to become chargeable to the parish of Spalding; and the adjudication was, that the pauper was likely to become chargeable, generally, without saying to the said parish of Spalding. And by Lord Hardwick, C. J. "There must be either an express adjudication, or a plain reference to the complaint; because it is the very point upon which the jurisdiction of the two justices is founded. Here the complaint is right; but the adjudication is at large, there being no words of reference. It is only that the pauper is likely to become chargeable. Now this may be to his relations or parents, as well as to the parish. And he cited the above case of St. Nicholas v. St. Peter's (supra), as similar to the present; and said that Rex v. Witham (b) was not finally determined by the court, but was referred to the judge of assize." And he added, "that there was no case that he could meet with, upon the strictest enquiry, where an adjudication at large, without some words of reference to the complaint, has been holden to be good."

Rex v. Ufculm, Burr. S. C. 138; 2 Bott, 870. It was objected, that the paupers were said to be likely to become chargeable, but did not say to what parish. The words were, "and whereas upon due examination and inquiry, it appears to us, and we do accordingly adjudge that they are likely to become chargeable." By Lee, C. J., and the court: "The objection is fatal. A complaint must appear 'of the pauper's being likely to become chargeable to the parish from whence removed;' and there must be an adjudication of the truth of it. (c) For the justices have no authority, without such complaint, and an adjudication of the truth of it. We cannot support an order by implication. There is no necessity indeed for any particular set or form of words. But there must be an adjudication of it in some words or other." Order quashed. Same point in Rex v. Netherton, Burr. S. C. 139, where the order was given up as indefensible. Same point in Rex v. Hucheston, Burr. S. C. 287.

4. *Of the Adjudication.*4. Of the Adjudication.

It is not sufficient that it appears upon the order, that the complaint and examination were regularly made, and that the removal is ordered in consequence, but the justices must expressly adjudicate upon the chargeability of the pauper and the place of his settlement. [See the forms of orders of removal post, Appendix.]

Suddlecomb v. Burwash, 2 Salk. 491; 2 Bott, 858. Order quashed, because it was only said to be complained by the officers, that the person removed was likely to become chargeable, but not adjudged so by the justices.

Rex v. Westwood, 1 Stra. 73; 2 Bott, 782. Order quashed, because the

The justices must make an express adjudication.

(a) These were the words used before stat. 35 Geo. 3, c. 101.

(b) A contrary doctrine had been held in that case, 1 Stra. 142; also in Maidstone v. Dething, 1 Stra. 393, and Rex v. Leofield, 2 Stra. 698, which are not considered to be cases of authority, and are therefore omitted.

(c) And it must now be shown that the pauper had actually become chargeable, 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, ante, 823.

justices only say, We order him to be removed to such a place, as the place of his last legal settlement, without adjudging that to be the place.

Rex v. Minchin Hampton, 2 Sess. Ca. 93. Order, "Whereas complaint is made to us, that such a person is now become chargeable; we do adjudge that the last place of his lawful settlement is in the parish of Minchin-Hampton." Objected, that here is no adjudication that he is likely to become chargeable; and quashed for this reason.

Stallinburgh v. Harlay, 1 Sess. Ca. 131; 2 Bott, 848. "On examination we do believe the same to be true." Quashed; for a man may believe a thing on uncertain evidence.

Reg. v. Waltham Magna, Sett. & Rem. 38: 2 Bott, 844. "Whereas such a person is likely to become chargeable, as we are credibly informed, these are therefore to require you to remove." Quashed, for that here is no adjudication that he is likely to become chargeable, and this is only the belief of another.

Bury v. Arundel, 2 Salk. 479; 2 Bott, 584. "Whereas complaint hath been made unto us, that Jacob Duckin, with his wife and children, came from his place of abode and last legal settlement in Bury to Arundel, we therefore require you to remove." Naught; for there is no adjudication of the justices which was his last legal settlement, but only a complaint that Bury was, which doth not appear whether true or false.

Egburn v. Hartley-Wintley, 1 Sess. Ca. 45; 2 Bott, 847. An order adjudges that a man was settled at such a place; and therefore they remove his widow thither. Quashed; for that here was no adjudication of the widow's settlement, and she might have gained a settlement after the death of her husband.

Rex v. Warnhill, 2 Sess. Ca. 92; 2 Bott, 662. Adjudication that the last legal place of the pauper is at Warnhill, in the county of Berks. Quashed; for that is no adjudication of the settlement.

His "legal place" insufficient.

Anon., 2 Salk. 473. It was held that legal settlement and last legal settlement are the same thing; because by every new settlement the precedent is discharged.

Crowland v. St. John the Baptist, 19 Vin. Ab. 399, n. 2. The justices need not allege how he was settled, nor negative the fact that the pauper did not rent a tenement of 10l. a year. (Weston Rivers v. St. Peter's, 2 Salk. 492; 3 Salk. 255.)

Reg. v. St. Mary Ottery, Sett. & Rem. 32; 2 Bott, 346. The justices say that the poor person was last settled there, according to their knowledge. By the court: "They should have said, he was last settled there: an order is a judgment, and must be certain and positive: he might have been settled elsewhere and they not know it." Quashed.

Rex v. Maulden, 2 Man. & R. 146; 8 B. & C. 78. This was an appeal (as stated in the notice) "against an order of settlement and maintenance" of a lunatic, and the order stated, that the justices, after due examination, having adjudged the legal place of settlement of A. C. to be Maulden, did require, &c. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think that on reading the order and the notice of appeal, we must assume that there was but one order, and one proceeding. The appellants by the notice of appeal treat the order in question as an order of settlement. That being so, the first question is, whether there appears on the face of the order a sufficient adjudication by the justices that the pauper's last place of settlement was in Maulden? The justices say in their order 'that they by virtue of the powers vested in them by the statute 5 Geo. IV., after due examination had on oath, having adjudged the legal place of settlement of the pauper to be in Maulden.' Now it is conceded, that if the justices had said 'that they do adjudge,' it would have been sufficient. As the appellants, however, by their notice of appeal treat the order in question as an order of settlement, we must assume that there was no other order made; and if that be so, we cannot understand the words 'having adjudged' to have been used in any other sense than that which would have belonged to the words 'do adjudge.' The next question is, is the order good altogether? It is objected to as being retrospective. The effect of a retrospective order

When "having adjudged" is sufficient.

5. *Form of
moval.*

The 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38, does not authorize a retrospective order for the maintenance of a lunatic. And an order stating that the justices have adjudged that the pauper's settlement is in a particular parish was held sufficient, though the form given in the schedule to the act was not pursued, and the order contained no words of present adjudication.

*Form of Order of

is to bring on inhabitants who ought not to bear it a charge incurred during a former period. It is quite unnecessary that the justices should have the power of making a retrospective order; for an order for the payment of a weekly maintenance might have been made as soon as the pauper was placed in the asylum; and as there is not any necessity that the justices should have such power, and as no such power is expressly reserved to them, I am of opinion that they had it not. This order, therefore, so far as it relates to the bygone time is bad, but good as to the residue." Rule absolute for quashing the order as to the 10*l.* 16*s.*, discharged as to the residue.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 4 Nev. & Man. 624. In November, 1832, Henry Beaumont was removed to the house of Joshua Burgess, licensed for the reception of insane persons, by the following order:—"To the overseers of the poor of the parish of Barrow-upon-Soar, in the county of Leicester. Whereas Henry Beaumont, of Barrow-upon-Soar aforesaid, who is deemed to be insane, and who hath been wandering about and at large there, hath this day been brought before us, C. M. Phillips and C. W. Parke, Esquires, two &c., pursuant to an order under our hands and seals for that purpose: And thereupon we the said justices, having called to our assistance S. Ed-dowes, surgeon, and upon examination had of him the said H. Beaumont are satisfied that he is so far disordered in his senses that it is dangerous for him to be permitted to go abroad; and having made inquiry into the circumstances and place of the last legal settlement of the said H. B., we have adjudged that his said settlement is in the parish of St. Nicholas, in the borough of Leicester:—You are therefore directed to cause the said H. B. to be conveyed to the house of J. Burgess, of Great Wigston, in the said county, duly licensed for the reception of insane persons. Given &c., 29th November, 1832." On the 2d November, 1834, an order, directed to the overseers of St. Nicholas, Leicester, was made by the same justices; which, after reciting the mandatory part of the former order, proceeded as follows:—"And whereas it appears to us the said justices, that the said H. Beaumont was, pursuant to our said order, forthwith conveyed to the house of the said J. Burgess, where he now remains: We therefore do hereby order and direct that you, the overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Nicholas aforesaid (the legal settlement of the said H. Beaumont being adjudged to be in your said parish), do and shall pay the weekly sum of 18*s.* unto the said J. Burgess for the maintenance, medicine, and care of the said H. Beaumont, during so long a time as the said H. Beaumont hath been and shall be under the care of the said J. Burgess, the said J. Burgess being willing to accept such weekly sum, and which appears to us to be a reasonable charge in that behalf. Given, &c." These two orders were removed by certiorari, and a rule nisi obtained for quashing them. Lord Denman, C. J. "It appears quite plain from the terms of the act, and from the judgment of Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Maulden (ante, 867), that a retrospective order cannot be supported; because by the act of parliament the power is only given to make an order for future maintenance. But with regard to the first order, there is in my opinion no valid objection to it. It proceeds on the 44th clause, which enacts [his lordship here read sect. 44, of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 40]. The justices are authorized to proceed in the same way with regard to the persons to whom that section relates as had been directed by the 38th section. Now according to s. 38, which refers to the schedule No. 5, there are only three descriptions of persons, viz. persons who are lunatic, insane, or dangerous idiots, for whose maintenance an order is authorized to be made; and the 44th section introduces a new description, viz. a person so far disordered in his senses, that it is dangerous for such person to be permitted to go abroad. In such a case section 44 requires the order to be made in conformity with the form given in the schedule No. 5, which is referred to by section 38. As section 44 requires the order to be made according to the form in the schedule, it must necessarily introduce into the meaning of the words of the form that new description of persons. The order in this case does not say, in the precise language of the form in schedule 5, that the party is a lunatic, insane, or dangerous idiot. Probably it would have been more correct to have introduced that form of words. The form, however, is sufficiently complied with when in every other respect the order follows the language of the schedule." Littledale, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. By section 44, (which relates to persons not chargeable, whereas section 38 relates to poor persons chargeable to any parish), this person is brought within the jurisdiction of the justices; for it appears that he was a person wandering about and at large, and deemed to be insane, and not chargeable to any parish, and that he was brought before the justices, and was found to be so far disordered in his senses that it was dangerous for him to be permitted to go abroad. The justices are also to inquire as to the settlement of the party. This they have done. By section 44, therefore, the justices have jurisdiction, and they are to exercise that jurisdiction in the manner therein pointed out. An objection is made to the form of the order, but it exactly pursues the form given in schedule 5, except where that form is adapted to a person who is lunatic, insane, or an idiot." Patteson, J. "I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute so far as regards quashing the prospective part of the second order. The first order appears to me to be good. The objection to the first order, as to the adjudication of settlement, is answered by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Maulden (ante, 867). We must construe the words 'have adjudged' as if they were 'do adjudge.' With regard to the objection as to the form of the order, we must look at section 38 coupled with section 44. It is evidently intended that when a party is deemed insane, wandering abroad, the justices should proceed in the manner pointed out in section 38, and that the form of order should be such as would apply to the circumstances of the case. In the form given in the act, the words 'as the case may be' are inserted after the words 'lunatic, insane, or idiot.' I do not mean to say that if the order in this case had used the word 'insane,' it would not have been good. Looking at section 44, the legislature seem to have used the words 'a person being so far disordered in his senses that it is dangerous for him to go abroad' as a definition of the insanity; for section 44, after directing an examination whether a person is so far disordered in his senses, that it is dangerous for him to be permitted to go at large, goes on to say, that the justices shall make inquiry into the settlement of such insane person. As to the retrospective part of the second order, Rex v. Maulden (ante, 867,) is directly in point, and this cannot be distinguished from that case." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. Two objections have been made to the order of November, 1832; of which the first is, that it does not follow the form in the schedule in the act. If the words of section 44 are examined, it will be found that there is nothing there said which makes that necessary. The act only directs that the parties shall proceed in the same manner before directed in the case of a person chargeable to any parish. Then when section 38 (which applies to persons chargeable) is looked at, the only direction there is, that it shall be lawful for the justices to make an order according to the form in the schedule, not that they are always to make use of that form, but they are to frame the order according to that form. It never can be contended that the very words of the form are to be used. The form states that the person is chargeable to the parish, without any restrictions with reference to the 44th section. It never could be the intention of the legislature, that a form untrue in fact should be used. The form in the schedule contemplates persons lunatic and insane, and idiots. A person not fit to walk abroad may be insane, but the 44th section, in my opinion, applies to a different class of persons from those described in section 38. The first objection, therefore, cannot be sustained. The other objection is, that there is no adjudication of the settlement. The first order is not directed to the parish to which the person is to be removed, but to the officers of the parish where the party is found. The words 'have adjudged' may be construed to mean 'do adjudge;' but surely if these words could not bear this meaning, yet as the section does not direct in what manner, or when, or where, an adjudication of the settlement is to be made, it would be quite sufficient for the justices to say 'we have adjudged' that the settlement is in a particular place. I quite agree that the second order is bad, in so far as it is retrospective." Second order quashed so far as relates to payments in respect of a by-gone period.

5. *Form of Order of Removal.*5. To whom Order directed.

5. To whom Order directed.

St. George v. St. Olave's, 2 Salk. 493; 2 Bott, 665. The order was to convey to the parish of St. Olave, and it was directed, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Olave. Quashed; for they ought and can only order the parish officers where the intrusion is made to make the removal.

It is not necessary to use the word churchwardens; if directed to the overseers it is sufficient. (Rex v. Searle, 1 Bott, 3.)

An order directed to officers of both parishes to remove and receive is bad, because it is entire. (Comb. 325.)

Rex v. Alverstone, 7 T. R. 564. The order was directed to the churchwardens, &c. of the parish, township, or division of U. and it was wished to have the opinion of the court whether such description was proper; and Lord Kenyon said, that as at present advised, he saw no objection to it. The order was quashed on another ground.

It is not necessary that the pauper should be conveyed by the overseers.

6. TIME AND MANNER OF SERVING OR EXECUTING THE ORDER OF REMOVAL.

In Llanwinio, 4 T. R. 473, one of the objections was, that there was an interval of a year between the signing of the order and the execution of it. Upon which Lord Kenyon said, there might be some weight in that objection, if the circumstances of the pauper had been altered, but nothing of that kind is stated here—nor indeed is any question referred to us on this point.

As to the service of an order of removal which has been suspended, see cases infra.

But in Rex v. Lampeter, 5 D. & R. 310; 3 B. & C. 454 (post, 873), as to the service of an order of removal which had been suspended, and which was not served till three years afterwards, the court held it an unreasonable time, and it was treated as a nullity. (See the cases, post, 873.)

To prevent the too precipitate removal of a pauper after the order has been obtained, the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, sect. 79, (see post, Appendix), enacts that no poor person shall be removed under an order of removal until twenty-one days after notice in writing of his being so chargeable or relieved, accompanied by a copy or counterpart of the order of removal of such person, and by a copy of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been sent, by post or otherwise, by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order, or any three or more of such guardians, to the overseers of the parish to whom such order shall be directed: Provided always, that if such overseers or guardians as last aforesaid, or any three or more of such guardians, shall by writing under their hands agree to submit to such order, and to receive such poor person, it shall be lawful to remove such poor person according to the tenor of such order, although the said period of twenty-one days may not have elapsed: Provided also, that if notice of appeal against such order of removal shall be received by the overseers or guardians of the parish from which such poor person is directed in such order to be removed within the said period of twenty-one days, it shall not be lawful to remove such poor person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal shall have expired, or, in case such appeal shall be duly prosecuted, until after the final determination of such appeal.

In Rex v. Alnwick, 5 Bar. & Ald. 184 (post, 876), it was held, that the service of the order of removal, to render the same valid, must be by delivery of the order itself, or by serving a copy of the order, and producing at the same time the original.

By 54 Geo. 3, c. 170, sect. 10, it was enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for the churchwardens, overseers, or others having the control, ordering, or management of the poor of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, to employ any proper person or persons whomsoever to carry, remove, and deliver any pauper or paupers ordered to be removed by any of his majesty's justices of the peace, competent to make such order; and that a delivery by such person or persons of any pauper or paupers so ordered to be removed shall be as good, valid, and effectual to all purposes whatsoever, as if the same was or were delivered by any churchwarden or overseer whatsoever."

Since this statute, although perhaps not strictly requisite, it has been considered advisable for the churchwarden and overseer to subscribe to a written deputation to the constable or other person appointed to remove the pauper; and the form of such deputation will be found in the Appendix.

churchwardens or overseers themselves.

7. OF SUSPENDING ORDERS OF REMOVAL.

By 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 2, (a) it is provided, "that if any poor person shall be brought before a justice, for the purpose of being removed by virtue of any order, or any vagrant pass, and it shall appear to the justice that such person is unable to travel, by reason of sickness or other infirmity, or that it would be dangerous for him so to do, the justice is required and authorized to suspend the execution of the same until it may safely be executed; which suspension of, and subsequent permission to execute the same, shall be indorsed on the order of removal or vagrant pass, and signed by the justice; and the charges incurred by such suspension may be directed to be paid by the parish to which such person is ordered to be removed, in case any removal shall take place, or in case of the death of such poor person before the execution of such order." (b)

The statute then provides a remedy for the costs, and gives a right of appeal, where the same shall exceed 20*l*.

The 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 1, (c) provides, that when any order of removal or vagrant pass shall be suspended, any other justice of the county or place where such removal or pass shall be made, may order the same to be executed.

And sect. 3 provides against the separation of husband and wife, or other persons nearly connected with each other, and living together as one family at the time of any order of removal made, or vagrant pass granted during the sickness of any one of such family.

Rex v. Everdon, 9 East, 101. An order was made to remove a pauper from Everdon to Wappenham, and suspended. By an order reciting the death of the pauper, and that 20*l*. 8*s*. 6*d*. expense had been incurred by the suspension, the same magistrates directed the parish officers of Wappenham to pay that sum to Everdon. Against this last order there was an appeal. Order quashed. Case:—The order of removal was made upon the examination of the pauper's father only, who swore that the pauper, from excessive infirmity and sickness, was unable to be brought before the justices who made the original order for examination, and that the said justices at the same time made the order for suspension. The pauper died without having been removed, and she had never been before the justices at any time upon the matter, nor been examined by them when they made the order of suspension. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. construed the words, "In case any poor person shall from henceforth be brought before any justice or justices of Charges incurred by such suspension to be paid by the officers of the parish to which they are ordered to be removed, which may be levied with costs.

It is not essential that the pauper should, but his case must, be brought before the justices; and pending illness of pauper an order, suspending his removal may be made in his absence.

(a) See this section at length, ante, 823.

(b) This act, improvidently, does not enable a magistrate to enforce reimbursement from time to time, but only in the event of actual removal or death. The consequence may be a long illness, and incapacity to be removed for many years; and then the burthen of reimbursement falls at once heavily upon the then inhabitants of the parish, instead of having been equalized amongst the inhabitants from time to time during the whole term. It has in this respect a twofold unjust operation; for the officers of the relieving parish may for years have to bear the expense, and their successors, who bore no part of the burthen, will receive in a lump the whole amount. In the parish of Wallop a pauper lived from 1808 till 1832 under a suspended order of removal, and the expense was 158*l*. 6*s*. 6*d*.

7. Of Suspending Orders of Removal.

the peace for the purpose of being removed," to mean, in case a question concerning the removal of any poor person shall be brought before the justices of the peace for the purpose of his removal, &c. And he said that the language of the act adverted to the case which most generally happens, where the pauper is brought before the magistrate to be examined as to his settlement; but that it appeared from Rex v. Bagworth (ante, 862), that it was not necessary in all cases, though if it can be, it is fit it should be so, but not absolutely necessary. And that all that the act meant was, not that where any person was brought personally, but where his case was brought judicially before the magistrates, for the purpose of his removal, that they should have power to suspend the execution of the order of removal, if it appeared to them by due examination of the facts, that from sickness or infirmity of the party due removal could not then safely be made. And he added, that in thus straining the words of the act, he did not go further than was done in Antony v. Cardigan (ante, 332), where the description of a person not having any child was construed to mean not having any child which could be a burthen to the parish where the father was hired and served. The other judges agreed, and the order of sessions quashed.

The power of ordering the charges incurred during the suspension of an order of removal to be paid is confined to two cases only, viz., the death or removal of the pauper; and therefore where a pauper, during the suspension of an order of removal, became irremovable in consequence of an estate descending to him: Held, that such a case was not within the act.

Rex v. Chagford, 4 B. & Ald. 235. On the 2nd December, 1816, two justices removed William Endacott from Chagford to Staverton. This order was suspended. On the 1st of July, 1817, the parish officers of Chagford, believing the pauper sufficiently recovered to be removed, obtained an order, taking off the suspension, and also for the payment of 22*l.* 17*s.* 1½*d.*, the expense of the suspension. Immediately after this order was made, it was ascertained that the pauper was still too ill to be removed, and on the 7th of July the justices signed a second order of suspension. On the 16th of May, 1819, the pauper's father died at Chagford, and by his death two freehold houses in Chagford descended to the pauper as heir-at-law. (a) The parish of Chagford thereupon ceased to relieve the pauper. On the 7th of February, 1820, another order was made for the removal, and also for the payment of 60*l.* 9*s.* expenses of the suspension. The pauper was never removed; but on the 18th of February, 1820, the appellants were, for the first time, served with the order of removal, and with the several other orders here mentioned, and on the same day payment was demanded of the expenses incurred by the suspension. The parish of Staverton gave notice, that they intended to appeal against an order made by B. Fulford and G. Gregory, bearing date the 1st of July, 1817, so far as the same order directs the payment of 22*l.* 17*s.* 1½; and also of an appeal against another order by B. Fulford and G. Gregory, bearing date the 7th of February, 1820, so far as that order directs the payment of 60*l.* 9*s.* The sessions quashed both orders. Abbott, C. J. "In this case we are called upon to put a new construction on this act of parliament, which was passed in order to prevent a grievance, arising from the too great temptation afforded to parish officers by orders of removal, to convey paupers from one place to another during sickness. The second section recites, that poor persons are often passed to the place of their settlement during the time of their sickness, to the great danger of their lives; and it gives a power to magistrates, in order to remedy this inconvenience, of not carrying their order into immediate effect, but of suspending its operation for a time. But then, in order to prevent this from producing any hardship to the removing parish, it provides, that no act done by the pauper during the suspension shall give him a settlement; and empowers the magistrates to order the intermediate charges to be paid by the parish to which the order is made, in case any removal shall take place, or in case of the death of such poor persons, before the execution of such order. This power, however, seems to me to be confined to these two cases only, viz. the removal and death of the pauper. Whether or not it would have been expedient for the legislature to have provided for the present case it is not for this court to say. All that we can do is to determine that the non-removal of the pauper prevents the case from falling within the act. I should have thought, indeed, that as the order of the magistrates, not being within the act, was altogether nugatory, the proper course for the sessions to have pursued would have been, not to have quashed the order, but to have dismissed the appeal. However, as they have done substantially right, I think their order ought to be confirmed." Bayley, J. observed, "that a very long period had elapsed, during which this order remained suspended, and no notice of it was given to the opposite party. If that notice had been given, (and there are no words in the act that supersede the necessity of it,) it might have enabled the other parish to have made prompt enquiry, and to have ascertained the fact relative to the settlement of the pauper." Holroyd, J. thought the statute could not be construed so as to apply to this case, although probably the legislature would, if it had occurred to them, have provided for it. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Englefield, 13 East, 317. An order was made for the removal of J. Timms, E. his wife, and two infant children, by name, from Englefield to Cassington; the order was suspended as to Joseph, until it should appear that he was sufficiently recovered from his illness to be removed without danger; and a third order was made on 17th March, 1810, which stated that Joseph died on the 7th instant, and that the charges incurred by the suspension amounted to 41*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, which they directed the parish of Cassington to pay. After the death of Joseph, his wife and children were removed under the first mentioned order from Englefield to Cassington; and on appeal against such order, and also the order for payment, the three orders were quashed, because the order suspending the order of removal had not been itself taken off by an order of magistrates on the death of Joseph. A difficulty occurred upon the opening of the case which the court thought could not be got over; upon what ground the sessions could quash these orders, which, upon the face of them, were all good, when the real objection to the removal of the wife and two children, if any, was the want of another order of magistrates taking off the suspension of the original order of removal. The respondents' counsel, indeed, suggested that the death of the husband operated as a natural death to the order of suspension, but the court did not decide the case on that ground, and it was observed, e contra, that the terms of the order of suspension did not apply to the case of death, but it was to operate till the sick person could be safely removed. For the other reason, however, the court quashed the order of sessions, and Le Blanc, J. referred to the precedent of a permission to remove after an order of suspension, given in the new (viz. the 21st) edition of Burn's Justice, as being best adapted to such a case.

No charges under a suspended order of removal can be recovered, unless a copy of the order and examination is served on the overseers within ten days of the order being made, by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 84. See Appendix. Before this statute, it was required that the order should be served within a reasonable time.

Rex v. Lampeter, 3 B. & C. 454; 5 D. & R. 310; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 437. Order was made on the 14th May, 1821, for the removal of Gwen Rees, widow, from Lampeter to Llanfairclydodge, but on the same day suspended on account of the age and infirmity of the pauper, which rendered it unsafe for her to travel. The same justices, on the 16th February, 1824, made an order, which recited that the pauper was dead, and that an expense of 12*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* had been occasioned by the suspension, which they directed the parish of Llanfairclydodge to pay. Both these orders were served upon the appellants for the first time on the same 16th February, upon which they appealed against the order of removal, and the sessions held that the order of removal and suspension never having been served in the pauper's lifetime, nor after her death, until the money was demanded, the order of removal had become a nullity. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the sessions came to the right conclusion in this case. The utmost effect of Rex v. St. Mary-le-bone (post, 876,) is this; that the death of a pauper during the suspension of Where an order for the removal of J. T., his wife and children, was suspended on account of the husband's sickness, who afterwards died, and the wife and children removed, without taking off the suspension, is no reason for the sessions quashing the order of removal.

The order must be served within ten days, to entitle the parish to any charges.

A suspended order of removal must be served within a reasonable time. Service after the lapse of three years, and after the death of the pauper, is not within a reasonable time.

7. Of Suspending Orders of Removal.

An order was made on the 21st of May, 1825, for the removal of a pauper to parish A., and suspended on the same day on account of the infirmity of the pauper. That parish had no notice of the order till the 12th of August, 1826, when it was served. Another order, dated the 24th of January, 1831, directed that the order of removal should be executed, and 80*l.* paid to the removing parish by parish A.; and this order was served on and the pauper removed to parish A. on the 16th of February, 1831. A. appealed to the then next sessions, and the sessions found that the original order of removal was not served within a reasonable time: Held, that it was not therefore void but voidable only by appeal, and that parish A. ought to have appealed to the next practicable sessions after it had notice of the original order.

an order for his removal does not render that order a nullity; and that a subsequent order for payment of the expenses is a grievance upon the parish to which the pauper is ordered to be removed, for which an appeal will lie against that order. No question arose in that case respecting the necessity of serving or giving notice of the order of removal, or the order for suspending it; that question arises, for the first time, in the present case. The legislature has not fixed any precise time for the service, but it is evident from the 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 2, that such an order may be served previous to a removal; and if a suspended order may be served, and reason and convenience require that it should be served before removal, the service should be within a reasonable time. In this case a period of three years elapsed between the issuing of the original order of removal and the death of the pauper, and during all that period no notice was given either of the original order or of the order of suspension. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the order of removal in this case was not served within a reasonable time, and consequently that the order of sessions must be confirmed." Bayley, J. observed, "that by the delay of three years, the opportunity of examining the pauper had been lost, and the expense incurred in supporting the pauper may be thrown upon persons not inhabitants of the parish during that period." Littledale, J. concurred.

Rex v. Penkridge, 3 Bar. & Ad. 538. An order was made by two justices of the county of Stafford, dated the 21st of May, 1825, for the removal of William Cooper to the parish of Leamington Priors, the execution of which order was (by another order of the said two justices indorsed on the order of removal and made on the same day) suspended on account of the infirmity of the pauper, which rendered him unable to travel. No notice of this suspended order was given to the parish of Leamington Priors until the 12th of August, 1826, when that parish was served with a copy of the order of removal, and the order for suspending the same. Against this order the parish of Leamington Priors did not appeal, until the removal of the pauper hereinafter mentioned. By another order made by two justices dated the 24th of January, 1831, and also indorsed upon the said order of removal, reciting that it appeared to the last-mentioned justices that the said order of removal might be executed without danger, and further stating that it had been duly proved to them, on oath, that the expense of 80*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* had been incurred by the suspension of the order of removal; the two last-mentioned justices directed that order to be forthwith put in execution, and the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish of Leamington Priors to pay to W. S. therein mentioned on demand the said sum of 80*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* This last-mentioned order, and the order of removal, and the order for suspending the same, were served on the parish officers of Leamington Priors on the 16th of February, 1831, the pauper was at the same time delivered to them and payment was demanded of the above-mentioned sum. The parish of Leamington Priors appealed against the suspended order of removal and the order of the 24th of January, 1831, at the Easter sessions for the county of Stafford in the year 1831, being the first sessions after the removal of the pauper and demand of the expenses. Upon the hearing of the appeal, the counsel for the appellants objected that the original order of removal had not been served within a reasonable time after it had been made. The court of quarter sessions were of that opinion, and quashed both the orders appealed against, subject to the opinion of this court on the above facts. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court. "This was a suspended order, of which no notice was given to the parish of Leamington Priors till fifteen months after it was made, the pauper having been, during that period, in such a state that it was improper to remove him. The order of January, 1831, in fact only took off the suspension. The suspended order was by two justices, who were to inquire and adjudicate as to the propriety of removing the pauper. The other order was by justices who were only to direct the execution of the first order and the payment of the charges attending it. The removal, therefore, was under the first order, and there was an appeal against it on the ground that as it was not served for so long a period after it was made it was a mere nullity; and it was argued, that this being so, the appeal to the sessions next after the actual removal of the pauper was in good time. If the first order had by reason of the death of the pauper become inoperative, it would have become a nullity of course; but the objection here taken was, that it was not served within a reasonable time: the sessions have so found, and of that they are the proper judges. It is, however, a question for us whether the order was for that reason absolutely null and void or voidable only. In our opinion it was voidable only and ought to have been avoided by appeal to the next practicable sessions after it was served. By the omission to appeal to that sessions, the parish to which the removal was to be made lost its opportunity of making that objection to the order. In Rex v. Lampeter (3 B. & C. 454; 5 D. & R. 310; ante, 873), the appeal was to the sessions next after the service of the order. Besides, that was a case where the order was not served till after the death of the pauper, and it had therefore become a nullity. Here the pauper was living at the time when the order was served, and there might therefore have been an appeal to the then next sessions." Rule absolute for quashing the order of sessions.

Rex v. Kynaston, 1 East, 117. A rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue to Mr. K., a magistrate of Essex, commanding him to indorse the warrant of distress issued by the magistrates for the borough of Colchester for 20*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, being the expenses incurred by the parish of Lexden in the maintenance of D. Glover and family in his illness, during the suspension of an order for removing him to his parish, and 30*s.* for the reasonable charges of the levy. D. G. on the 31st of May, 1799, as he was driving a waggon on the public road leading through Lexden, had the misfortune to break both his legs, and was immediately taken to the workhouse there, where he continued till the 31st of July. On the 6th of May, two justices took the pauper's examination and made an order for removing him and his wife, who was then attending him, from Lexden to Coggeshall in Essex; and at the same time the magistrates indorsed an order of removal, by virtue of the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, stating, that it would be dangerous to remove him at that time; and he continued there accordingly till the 31st of July, when the order of removal was by their permission executed. The same magistrates afterwards made an order on the parish officers of Great Coggeshall to repay the parish of Lexden 20*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, for expenses incurred in the cure and maintenance of the pauper: and the overseers of Great Coggeshall, not paying this within three days after demand, nor giving notice of appeal, as required by the same act, the magistrates granted a warrant of distress: but Great Coggeshall being without the jurisdiction of the magistrates granting the warrant, the parties applied to the defendant, who was an acting magistrate within the jurisdiction of Great Coggeshall, to indorse the warrant of distress for execution, which he refused, whereupon the present rule was obtained. Lord Kenyon, C. J. after looking into 35 Geo. III. c. 101, said, "It was impossible to make any question upon this part of it: it is peremptory upon the magistrate under these circumstances to indorse the warrant; he has nothing to do with the propriety of making the original order or granting the original warrants; he acts merely ministerially; in like manner as justices do in allowing a poor rate, whose signatures are mere matter of form. The justices, indeed, by whom the original order and warrant were issued, had a discretion to exercise upon the matter submitted to them: but the magistrate who merely indorses the warrant of another, under this act, is not answerable for the legality of it, which remains at the hazard of him who first granted it; here also, the order, being for payment of above 20*l.*, might have been appealed against by the parties who were dissatisfied with it, and then the merits of the question might have been discussed; but the court cannot do otherwise at present than make the rule absolute."

Rex v. Bradford, 9 East, 97. An order was made on the 7th of July, 1807, for the removal of S. Spires from Bradford to Melksham and suspended. On the 16th of September they directed the first order to be executed, and 41*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* expenses of the suspension to be paid by Melksham to Bradford. On the 17th of September, the pauper was carried to Melksham; and a motion was made at the Michaelmas sessions following, to enter and adjourn an appeal against the order for the payment of the expenses, which was agreed to by the court; but they reserved the question, whether any appeal were allowed to the sessions, the appellants not having given notice of appeal within three days after the removal of the pauper to the respondent parish. But Lord Ellenborough, C. J. “held the meaning of the clauses to be clearly this; if the party aggrieved by the order, and intending to appeal against the amount of the charges, will give notice of the appeal within three days after demand made, he shall be relieved from the inconvenience of a distress: but though he neglect to do so, he only subjects himself to that inconvenience; for his right of appeal, which is afterwards given, is not thereby taken away; and if he afterwards think proper to appeal, within the time appointed by law for appeals against orders of removal, he is expressly empowered to do so.” Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Mary-le-bone, Middlesex, 13 East, 51. An order was made on 3d July, 1809, for the removal of James Harlow from Hitchin to St. Mary-le-bone, the execution of which was at the same time suspended by reason of the sickness of the pauper. By an order of the 18th of September following, the same justices, reciting that J. H. was dead, directed the expense incurred by the suspension to be paid. St. M. appealed against the order of removal, and the order for the payment of the charges. The sessions dismissed both appeals, and stated, that neither of the orders of removal or suspension thereof were served on the parish officers of St. M. until after the death of the pauper, which happened between the 3d and 11th of July, 1809; after which time the parish officers of St. M. were served with the orders, and 5*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* given thereby was demanded, at which time they gave notice of appeal to the parish officer of H. against the order of removal, and also against the order of adjudication for the payment of the charges incurred by the suspension. The respondents offered no evidence that the pauper was settled in the parish of St. M., but contended that no appeal could lie against the order of removal, as it had never been executed; and that there can be no execution of an order of removal, but by delivering the pauper to the officers of the parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. “The appeal is by the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 9, given to the party aggrieved by the determination of the justices respecting the settlement of the pauper; then, though the grievance grow by a subsequent statute, the party is still aggrieved by the order of removal. Before the 35 Geo. III., there was no grievance to the parish to which the order of removal was made, until it was executed: but that statute attaches a contingent consequence to the order itself in this case, which, coupled as it is with the order for payment of costs, makes it a grievance, though the pauper died before any removal in fact took place. Then the appeal against the order of costs is not against the quantum, but against the liability of the parish to pay any costs at all in this case; taking it as a consequence of the order of removal appealed against.” Order of sessions quashed.

Time of appealing, how computed. An order of removal, dated 1st August, 1814, and an order of suspension indorsed thereon, and a copy thereof was in 1814 served upon the appellants, but the original was not produced at the same time; and subsequently, in 1815, another part of the order and indorsement executed by the same justices, but bearing date in

Rex v. Alnwick, 5 B. & Ald. 184. Order of removal, dated the 6th of August, 1814, of M. Walker, from Alnwick to the chapelry of Haydon, at the Michaelmas sessions in 1820, was discharged. Case:—The pauper, at the time of the order, was in such a state of health that she could not be removed without danger, the execution of the order was therefore suspended. About the 6th September, 1814, a copy of the order and indorsement was served upon one of the overseers of Haydon, by a person sent by one of the overseers of Alnwick, such person not then having the order with him; and on the 4th October, 1815, another part of the original order of removal and indorsement was served upon one of the overseers of Haydon by the overseers of Alnwick. This last had not been executed by the removing justices on the 6th August, 1814, but by them in September, 1815. It however bore date the 6th of August, 1814. The order originally executed was not at any time shown to any of the overseers of Haydon. The suspension was taken off in August, 1819, and an order was then indorsed by the justices for the payment of 16*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*, the charges incurred by the suspension. On the 5th of September 1820, the pauper was removed from Alnwick to Haydon, and an appeal against the order of removal was entered at the Michaelmas sessions, 1820. It was contended that, according to the 49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 2, (ante, 825,) the time of appealing against such order was to be computed from the time of serving the order, and not from the time of making the removal. Abbott, C. J. "The objection made here to the judgment of the court of quarter sessions, is, that they have allowed this appeal, when, in point of law, the appellants were not entitled to it, not having appealed within the time allowed by law. That question depends entirely upon the validity of the service of the order. Now that service, in order to be valid, must either be by delivery of the order itself, or by leaving a copy of the order, and at the same time producing the original. It is admitted that the service, in 1814, was defective; but then, in 1815, there was a second service. Now, if that was the service of a copy, it is bad, for the same reason as vitiated the previous service. It is however contended, that this was the service of a new original order. But if we were to hold that to be so, we should, as it seems to me, give to it an effect not intended by the justices who executed it; for if they had intended it as a new order, they would have given to it a date corresponding with the time of its execution. I think that they never could have intended it as a new order, they would have given to it a date corresponding with the time of its execution. I think that they never could have intended it as a new order, but only as an authenticated copy of their former order; and that the court of sessions were right in so treating it. In that view of the case, it is clear that both services are defective, and consequently that the appeal was in time, and the order of sessions is therefore right." Order of sessions confirmed.

7. Of Suspending Orders of Removal.

August, 1814, was served upon the appellants. The pauper was not removed till 1819, when an appeal was duly entered: Held, that the services of the original order of removal in 1814 and 1815 were both defective, and that the appeal was made in time, notwithstanding 49 Geo. 3, c. 124, s. 2.

8. OF FILING ORDER OF REMOVAL UNAPPEALED AGAINST.

As an order of removal, executed upon the parish to which it is directed, and which is unappealed against, is binding upon such parish as to the settlement of the pauper at that period, and may therefore become an important piece of evidence at some future period, the expediency of preserving the document itself in an authenticated form is obvious. Upon this subject there is a report as follows:—Anonymous, 1 Salk. 406. Per Holt, C. J. "The most regular way for justices to proceed upon the 14 Car. II. in removing a poor person, is to make a record of the complaint and adjudication, and upon that to make a warrant under their hands and seals to the churchwardens, to convey the persons to the parish to which they ought to be sent, and deliver in the record per proprias manus into court next sessions, to be kept there amongst the records, to charge the parish; and that record may be well removed by the general certiorari to the justices of the peace: Mr. Broderick said he had advised the justices in Surrey to do so." And upon this it is remarked in a former edition of Burn's Justice. (a) But how such record shall charge the parish is not perhaps very evident; unless it shall appear likewise that a removal was made in pursuance of such order; otherwise, how shall the parish be charged by an order which possibly they know nothing of, and consequently could have no opportunity to appeal against? It is there said to be usual in some places for the overseers who make the removal to bring the order to the next sessions, and there make oath that they removed the party in pursuance of such order, and if then there appeared to be no appeal against it, the order is confirmed by the court, and filed amongst the records. And although such confirmation is merely void, because the sessions have no jurisdiction therein, unless in the case of appeal, which here is not; yet such confirmation is also superfluous and needless. But an order, not appealed against, is final without more; and as such order is a record of itself, and contains in it the adjudication of the justices, it seemeth that the court (at the next sessions) may record thereupon that no appeal was made, for in that case they are the proper judges whether an appeal was made or not. But still it seemeth that unless it be upon appeal, they have no power to inquire concerning the removal, for that as to them is extra judicial: but the justices who made the order have a right to see it executed; and therefore they may inquire upon oath, whether the removal was duly made; and if it was, they may record the whole. Which record of the whole proceedings, being delivered in at the next sessions, and the court thereupon recording likewise that no appeal was made, in such case perhaps the parish may be concluded. [See the form of such a record, post, Appendix.]

To such record may be annexed the order of removal confirmed at the sessions on appeal, or not appealed against. And it may be proper to have duplicates, one filed at the sessions, and the other kept by the township. (See enactment of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40, ante, 843, and post, Appendix.)

9. Penalty and Punishment for not obeying Order of Removal.

9. PENALTY AND PUNISHMENT FOR NOT OBEYING ORDER OF REMOVAL.

It will be seen that by 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 10 (ante, 822), a penalty of 5*l.* is inflicted upon churchwardens or overseers for refusing to receive a person sent to them by warrant of removal. Such refusal may be punished also by indictment, for the enactment does not apply to all cases.

Rex v. Davis, Say. 163; 1 Bott, 338. Indictment for refusing to receive a pauper sent by order of two justices to the liberty of the Tower. Plea, not guilty. Verdict against the defendant. It was moved in arrest of judgment that 3 Will. III. c. 11, having directed another method of punishment, to wit, a fine to be levied by warrant of distress in a summary way, that should be strictly pursued. Denison, J. "If a statute create a new offence, and give a punishment, that rule must be followed: but if the offence was before at common law, and a new punishment only given, it is indictable also. So if one statute give one punishment, and another statute give another punishment, the prosecutor has his election. This was an offence before the 3 Will. III. Such a parish officer might have been indicted on the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, or what would have become of a pauper in case of disobedience between the passing those acts; but the 3 Will. III. c. 11, does not relate to removals from parish to parish, but from county to county; and therefore there is no remedy but by indictment." Foster, J. "In all cases where a justice has power given him to make an order, and directs it to an inferior ministerial officer, and he disobeys it, if there be no particular remedy prescribed, it is indictable." And judgment was given against the defendant. To which may be added, that the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, requires in express words that such officer refusing shall be bound over to the assizes or sessions, there to be indicted (ante, 582).

4. *Of Persons
Returning after Removal.*

4. Of Persons Returning after Removal.

If the person removed return of his own accord, without a certificate, the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 3, directs that he shall be punished as a vagabond. Upon this Lord Tenterden has remarked, in Rex v. Barham (8 B. & C. 99, ante, 668), that "it was insisted that the return of the pauper, after the removal, was an offence against the law; but since the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, this may admit of considerable doubt. Before that act, a person likely to become chargeable was removable, and if he returned after the removal, he returned in the same condition; but as that act renders a person irremovable, unless actually chargeable, he may after his removal return with the means of subsistence; and it is difficult to say that by so returning he commits an offence." This view sanctions the doubts expressed by Mr. Evans, in a note on 17 Geo. II. c. 3, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, which enacts, that persons returning and becoming chargeable to the parish from whence they had been removed, shall be deemed idle persons.

Rex v. Angell, Cas. Tem. Hardw. 124; 2 Bott, 884. The justices of Berkshire held a petty sessions to search after vagrants, and a poor man, residing in the parish of Bingfield, being examined, confessed himself to be settled in the parish of Sunning, whereupon the justices ordered him to be removed to Sunning. On his return from Sunning without a certificate, the defendant, one of the justices present at the petty sessions, did, without any summons, or oath made of his return, commit the man to the house of correction, where he was kept three days. Upon this the court was moved to grant an information against the justice. The court allowed the transactions of the petty sessions in this case to be irregular, because there was no complaint made of his being chargeable or likely to be chargeable to Bingfield; but yet, as that was only a mistake of judgment, the court would not have thought it worthy of punishment; but the sending him to the house of correction, after having convicted him unheard, being contrary to natural justice, they were inclinable to grant an information; but as no malice appeared in the justice, the court allowed the prosecutor to accept of some proposal made by the justice to make him satisfaction.

Baldwin v. Blackmore, 1 Burr. 595. Baldwin and his wife were removed from Marsden to Banknewton. Afterwards they both of them returned to Marsden, without bringing a certificate; complaint of which being made in writing, and upon oath, to the defendant, a justice, he issued his warrant to bring them before him, who being brought and the facts fully proved upon oath, he committed them to the house of correction, until they should be discharged from thence by due course of law. Upon the trial of this cause, there was a verdict for the plaintiff, and 1s. damages, subject to the opinion of the court on two questions:—1. Whether there ought not to have been a previous conviction of vagrancy? 2. Whether the wife could be convicted of vagrancy, or be liable to be sent to the house of correction for returning without a certificate, as she only accompanied and resided with her own husband? On the argument of this cause, Lord Mansfield, C. J. desired to be informed how the usage had been about sending the wife to the house of correction with the husband: (though it would not indeed, as he observed, alter the law.) Afterwards, this case being mentioned as standing for the opinion of the court, it was said for the defendant, that he had several certificates of its being the practice for justices to commit the wife as well as the husband, for returning to the parish from whence they had been removed, although she so returned with her husband. Lord Mansfield, C. J. delivered the resolution of the court. He observed, “that it was manifest the justice had not acted intentionally wrong. And it is plain that the jury were of that opinion, as appears by their giving only 1s. damages. The court would gladly therefore have leaned towards excusing him from suffering for what he had honestly done, if they could have found him justifiable by any legal excuse. But there is one fatal objection to his proceeding, which we cannot get over, and which puts all the other points out of the case, and that is, that the warrant of commitment is illegal. The legality of the warrant depends upon two acts of parliament, or at least upon one of them. For there are two acts of parliament, upon one of which two this warrant must be founded, though it doth not appear upon which the justice proceeded. The two acts are 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, (a law made before certificates under the late acts existed); and 17 Geo. II. c. 5, [which related to persons returning without bringing such a certificate, and is repealed by 3 Geo. IV. c. 40; see 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, tit. Vagrants.] Now the warrant is not within the former of these acts; nor is the case itself within it. These persons did not go to any parish, carrying with them a certificate of their being inhabitants of their proper parish. The commitment is, till discharged by due course of law; whereas upon this act it should have been to the house of correction, there to be punished as a vagabond, or to a public workhouse, there to be employed in work and labour. Nor can this warrant be good on the latter act; because the power given to the justice by that act is, to commit such offenders to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month: whereas this warrant is quite general: it is an indefinite commitment; not for a precise limited time, as the act directs. Therefore the warrant of commitment is totally illegal; and consequently the plaintiff is entitled to the damages that he has recovered.”

Rex v. Elere Cole, 2 Bott, 886. A motion was made to discharge a man out of custody, because 1st, the commitment does not state to what place the man returned; 2dly, nor that he returned without a certificate; 3dly,

4. Of Returning after Removal.

The warrant of commitment must be for a time definite.

The commitment must state to what place the pauper returned.

4. Of Returning after Removal.

Returning to reside on a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* : Held, to be right.

A conviction of the plaintiff for unlawfully returning, without a certificate, to a parish from which he had been removed, is a good answer to an action, though in fact he did not return in a state of pauperism.

that it did not appear that he had been before convicted as a vagrant, which prior conviction alone, under stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 5, gave a power of commitment for a month. The commitment was "for returning from the parish of St. Sepulchre's, after a legal warrant of removal from the parish of the Holy Trinity." Lord Mansfield. "This commitment cannot be supported; it does not say to what place he returned." Aston, J. "It is totally uncertain."

Rex v. Fillongley, 2 T. R. 709. The pauper returned to the parish from whence he had been removed, and resided upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* and upwards; the court said he had a right to return, for that an order of removal only prevents a return in a state of vagrancy.

Mann v. Davers, 3 B. & Ald. 103. Action for false imprisonment. Verdict for the plaintiff, 40*s.* damages. The defendant, who was a magistrate of Suffolk, committed the plaintiff to prison as an idle and disorderly person, under 17 Geo. II. c. 5. The defence was a regular recorded conviction of the plaintiff, and the information stated, that within three months the plaintiff unlawfully returned from the parish of A. to the parish of B., from which parish he had been removed to the said parish of A. by an order, &c. without bringing a certificate from the said parish of A. The conviction then stated, that plaintiff, being brought before the defendant, had confessed himself guilty of the offence. It appeared that when the plaintiff returned to the parish, he was not in a state of pauperism, but maintained himself by his own labour, and was actually taken up upon the charge upon which he was convicted when he was working in the harvest fields. The question was, whether the conviction was a bar to the action? Abbott, C. J. "This information pursues the language of the statute, and in so doing it does all that is necessary to be done. The returning to the parish without a certificate was at least prima facie evidence of his being an idle and disorderly person, and then it was for the defendant to show that he had a lawful excuse for returning. It would be extraordinary indeed if a person who refuses to answer, and suffers the magistrate to convict him, should afterwards be at liberty to bring an action against the magistrate; the defendant here confessed the substance of the charge, and when called upon for an excuse, he does not give one, but suffers imprisonment, in order that he may afterwards bring an action against the magistrate." Bayley, J. "The facts of the case induce a suspicion that it was one of considerable hardship on the party who had been removed. We must however consider the situation in which magistrates would be placed, if a party who neglected to make his defence when he had the opportunity could afterwards sue the magistrate. It seems that the parish officer had lodged before the magistrate a complaint, upon which, if established, the party was liable to punishment. The substance of the charge was, that he had returned unlawfully; if he could show any lawful excuse for his return, he might have stated that before the magistrate; he however confesses that he is guilty of the offence charged, upon which the law says that he is an idle and disorderly person, and I am of opinion that he cannot now turn round and bring an action against the magistrate." Holroyd, J. concurred. Best, J. "This conviction appears to be in the ordinary form; nevertheless I must say that the parish officer acted most improperly in taking a man up as a vagrant who was at work in the harvest field. But when he was before the magistrate, and alleged no fact to show that he was not, as he appeared to be, in a state of vagrancy, the magistrate could do nothing but convict him. Had he stated to the magistrate that he returned for the purpose of working, it would have been a question for the court whether the magistrate should not have used the language of this court in Rex v. Fillongley" (ante, 632.) Judgment for the defendant.

5. Order of Removal of one Certificated.

5. Order of Removal of one Certificated.

The nature of a certificate, and the provisions as to its form, delivery, and extent, are explained under the title Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate (ante, 773.)

It is provided by the 3 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 9, "That when any overseer or overseers of the poor of any parish or place, or other person, shall remove back any person or persons, or their families, residing in such parish or place, or sent thither by certificate, and becoming chargeable as aforesaid to the parish or place to which such person or persons shall belong, such overseers or other persons shall be reimbursed such reasonable charges as they may have been put unto in maintaining and removing such person or persons, by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish or place to which such person or persons is or are removed, the said charges being first ascertained and allowed of by one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace for the county or place to which such removal shall be made; which said charges so ascertained and allowed, shall, in case of refusal of payment, be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish or place to which such certificate person or persons is or are removed, by warrant or warrants under the hand and seal, or hands and seals of such justice or justices, returning the overplus, if any there be; which warrant or warrants he or they are hereby required to grant."

5. Order of Removal of one Certificated.

Overseers to be reimbursed on reconveying certificate persons.

There does not appear to have been any difficulty in understanding or carrying into effect the above provision, as the books present no cases upon its construction. It is probable that the only question which could arise, requiring the judgment of the superior court, would be, whether when a certificate person has been once removed back to the certifying parish, the latter has the power of sending him into the same parish from which he has been so removed again with a fresh certificate. There is nothing in the statute nor in the reason or policy of the law to prevent it. In many instances if the person finds it expedient to quit his own parish once more in search of employment, he will prefer to return to the place in which he has been before, as most likely to answer his purpose; and this is not likely to operate as a hardship upon the parish to which he so returns, as should he again become chargeable the expense of again removing him, and of his maintenance in the mean time, must be borne by the parish from which he is certificated.

Semble if justices discover that the order is not tenable, they may by fresh order supersede it, after which the Court of King's Bench would not compel them to give effect to the appeal. (Rex v. Norfolk, 1 Dowl. & Ry. 69; Rex v. Lincolnshire, 3 B. & C. 549; 5 D. & R. 347.)

VI. Appeal against an Order of Removal. (a)

The law relating to appeals has been classed as follows:—

1. The Statutes relating to the Appeal.
2. Who may appeal, and to the Sessions of what Place.
3. Within what Time the Appeal must be made.
4. Entering Appeal after executed Order is superseded.
5. Of Adjournment.
6. Of Notice of Appeal.
7. Evidence.

6. Appeal against an Order of Removal.

1. THE STATUTES RELATING TO APPEAL.

The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 2, enacts, "That all persons who think themselves aggrieved by any such judgment of the said two justices, may appeal to the justices of the peace of the said county, at their next quarter sessions, who are hereby required to do them justice according to the merits of their cause."

1. The Statutes relating to Appeal.

13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12.
Power of appealing.

(a) As to the evidence, &c. on appeal, requiring costs of respite of appeal, see ante, 858, tit. Examination; and as to 1 B & Ad. 895.

1. Statutes relating to Appeal.

The appeal must be to the quarter sessions of the county from which the pauper is removed.

Overseers to have access to pauper: in cases of appeal.

2. Who may appeal, and to what Sessions.

The pauper may appeal as well as the parish.

And where an order directed the removal of paupers to the parish of L., and they were removed and delivered to a hamlet within the parish of a different name: Held, on appeal by such hamlet, that the respondents cannot object to a notice of appeal given in the name of such hamlet, they having delivered the pauper to the officers of such hamlet.

And 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 6, enacts, "That the appeal against any order for the removal of any poor person from out of any parish, township, or place, shall be had, prosecuted, and determined at the general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, division, or riding wherein the parish, township, or place from whence such poor person shall be removed, doth lie, and not elsewhere; any former law or statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

We have already noticed the provision of the 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, which prohibits the removal of a pauper, where notice of appeal has been given within the twenty-one days. The same statute, by the 80th section, provides that in case of appeal the overseers shall have access to the pauper to examine him as to his settlement, and even if necessary to remove him out of the respondent parish; such removal however to be at the expense of the appellant parish. This statute further provides that the grounds of appeal shall be stated in the notice (post, Notice of Appeal), and enables the sessions to grant costs either of the appeal or of frivolous statements.

2. WHO MAY APPEAL, AND TO WHAT SESSIONS.

Rex v. Hartfield, Carr. 222; 2 Bott, 924. Two justices removed Nicholas Wells from Hartfield to Frampfield; from which order Wells, and not the parish, appealed. By the whole court: "The party may appeal as well as the parish." (See also Rex v. Calcraft, post.)

Rex v. Bishop's Wearmouth, 3 Nev. & M. 77; 5 B. & Ad. 942 (ante, 850). A township may appeal, although the order is directed to the parish.

Rex v. Carmarthenshire, 1 Nev. & M. 368; 4 B. & Ad. 563. Two justices, on the 25th of August, 1832, made an order for the removal of a pauper and her children from Mothvey to Llywell. The order was directed "To the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Llywell," and after adjudging that the lawful settlement of the paupers was in the parish of Llywell, it proceeded in the usual form to require "the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of Llywell," to receive and provide for the paupers. The parish of Llywell is divided into three hamlets, viz. Treganmaur, Traganlaes, and Hydach, each of which maintains its own poor, and has separate churchwardens, separate overseers of the poor, and separate rates. Appeals have frequently been tried against orders of removal between the three hamlets, at the Brecon quarter sessions. There are no such officers as churchwardens or overseers for the whole parish of Llywell. On the 27th of August, 1832, the paupers named in the order of removal were delivered by an officer of the removing parish of Mothvey to one of the overseers of the hamlet of Treganmaur, together with the order of removal. The overseer received the paupers, but at the next quarter sessions held in October, 1832, an appeal against the order of removal was duly lodged and respited on behalf of the churchwardens and overseers of the hamlet of Treganmaur, and on the 22d of December, 1832, the following notice of appeal was duly served upon the churchwardens and overseers of Mothvey: "To the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Mothvey, in the county of Carmarthen: This is to give you notice, that we the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the hamlet of Treganmaur, in the parish of Llywell, in the county of Brecon, do intend at the next quarter sessions of the peace to be held in and for the said county of Carmarthen, to prosecute an appeal which was duly lodged at the last quarter sessions, against an order of, &c. for and concerning the removal of Jane Jones and her four children (describing them by their names, &c.) to our said hamlet of Treganmaur, in the said parish of Llywell, in the county of Brecon aforesaid, from your said parish of Mothvey, in the said county of Carmarthen." The appeal came on at the sessions held in January, 1833, and on proof of service of the notice of appeal, an objection was made on behalf of the respondent parish, that the notice was improper, inasmuch as it ought to have been given by the overseers of the parish of Llywell, to whom the order was directed, and not by the officers of the hamlet of Treganmaur; and a further objection was made, that the notice stated the order to be an order for the removal of the paupers to the hamlet of Treganmaur, in the parish of Llywell, whereas the order appeared to be an order for their removal to the parish of Llywell. The justices at sessions determined against hearing the appeal, on the ground of the informality of the notice on the objections above stated, and the appeal was accordingly dismissed. A rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances, and hear the appeal, was afterwards obtained. Denman, C. J. "We are of opinion that the quarter sessions ought to have heard the appeal. The notice of appeal could not mislead the parish officers of Mothvey, to whom it was addressed. It recited the order of removal sufficiently; the names of the paupers, the removing parish, and the part of the parish of Llywell to which the removals were made under the order, although the order professed to remove to the parish at large. The parish of Mothvey is estopped by its own acts from availing itself of the objection. The removal was by the order to the parish at large; but the service of that order was on the hamlet. Parties who have thus acted upon their own order cannot afterwards say that an appeal against it under such a notice as this shall not be heard." Littledale, Taunton, and Patteson, Js. concurred. Rule absolute.

Any inhabitant may appeal. (Rex v. Denbighshire, ante, 849.)

Rex v. Wendover, 2 Salk. 490; 2 Bott, 953. Two justices of St. Alban's remove a person to Wendover. Wendover appeals to the sessions of St. Alban's. By the court: "The appeal ought to have been to the sessions of the county, and not of the corporation; and as it was, it was coram non

2. Who may Appeal, &c.

The appeal must be to the sessions for the county, and not of the corporation.

Rex v. Malden, Sett. & Rem. 10; 2 Bott, 959, n. By Lord Parker, C. J. "Where there is a town corporate that hath sessions of its own, and the justices within that town make an order there, if the parties will appeal, they must appeal to the county sessions, and not to their own sessions; for then there would be an appeal ab eodem ad eundem, there being it may be the same justices sitting who made the order."

Same point.

Rex v. East Donyland, Burr. S. C. 592; 2 Bott, 959. Two justices for the borough of Colchester removed the pauper from St. Giles's, in Colchester, to East Donyland, in Essex; and on appeal to the quarter sessions of the borough, the justices there confirmed the order, and stated a case. Upon arguing the matter there it was observed, that the appeal ought to have been to the county sessions. Unto which it was answered, that the parties having acquiesced in the jurisdiction, and entered upon the merits, and actually settled a case for the opinion of the court, they were not at liberty now to make the objection. But by the court: "The borough sessions had no jurisdiction to make this order of confirmation, and, therefore, their opinion and their order are both nugatory. The appeal ought to have been to the quarter sessions of the county. As no such appeal has ever been made, the original order stands good, as unappealed from." And accordingly the original order was confirmed.

An appeal from an order of borough justices must be to the county justices. (a)

Rex v. The Justices of Carmarthen, 4 B. & Ald. 291. Two justices of the borough of Carmarthen, on the 23d of May, 1820, removed a pauper from St. Peter, in that borough, to New Church, in the county of Carmarthen. New Church appealed, and in their notice of appeal stated their intention of appealing to the next quarter sessions of the borough of Carmarthen. At the next sessions (which, it appeared, were the general, and not the quarter sessions) for the borough, held on the 21st September last, the parties accordingly attended, and applied for leave to lodge the appeal; but the magistrates refused the application. A rule nisi was obtained for a mandamus. It appeared from the affidavits that the borough of Carmarthen was a county of itself, and that by the charter there were annually elected six peers of the borough, who, with the mayor and recorder, were magistrates of the borough, and had the power twice in a year to hold a court of view of frank-pledge, and to summon the sessions of the peace within the borough, and to hold the sessions of the peace there, and to do all things relating to the sessions of the peace, according to the custom of England; and that in the said court they had full power to hear, execute, and determine upon all articles, misprisions, trespasses, and offences within the borough, which, according to law, belong to the court of view of frank-pledge, or to the office of justices of the peace in their quarter sessions, or otherwise to execute and determine. It also appeared, that the parish of St. Peter was co-extensive with the borough; but that three out of the eight magistrates did not reside in the parish. It was argued, that there is nothing in the charter enabling the magistrates to do acts relating to the poor laws at their general sessions. Lord Hale lays it down, that a general sessions is perfectly distinct from a quarter sessions. (a) By 13 & 14 Car. II. the appeal was given to the quarter sessions; but by 8 & 9 Will. III. altered to "general or quarter sessions." Here, too, there are only three justices who can sit to determine this appeal; for by 16 Geo. II. c. 18, all the rest are disqualified. And by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, it was provided, that in limited jurisdictions, where there are not four magistrates, the appeal must be to the county sessions. Abbott, C. J. said, "I am of opinion that the true construction of the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, is, that if there be an appeal to the sessions of a town which is a county of itself, where by charter only general sessions are held, it must be made to the general sessions. Here, the magistrates are empowered to hear and determine upon all articles within the borough, which, according to law, belong to the office of justices of the peace in their quarter sessions, or otherwise, to determine. Now this is a very large expression, and comprehends, as it seems to me, a power to decide upon orders of removal. As to the other objection, it appears that there are three magistrates at least qualified to act, and a sessions of the peace may, it is known, be held before two magistrates. The act of parliament to which a reference has been made only applies to corporations or franchises, where there are not more than four justices altogether; and, besides, it does not apply to appeals against orders of removal. Upon the whole, therefore, I am of opinion, that this rule ought to be made absolute. (See Rex v. Essex, ante, 217.)

3. Within what Time the Appeal must be made.

Appeal must be to the next sessions.

It need not be within the 21 days after the order.

To be the next sessions after the removal.

Parties not aggrieved till after the removal.

The time limited for appealing against an order of removal is not suspended by the matter being referred to arbitration, if the award is not final.

3. WITHIN WHAT TIME THE APPEAL MUST BE MADE.

By 13 & 14 Car. II. the appeal must be to the next quarter sessions after the judgment.

We have seen before that the pauper cannot be removed until twenty-one days after the order has been sent to the overseers of the parish to which the removal has been made. It is not necessary, however, to give notice of appeal within that time. (Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, post, 888, "Notice of Appeal.")

Rex v. Norton, 2 Stra. 831. Exception was taken to an order of sessions, because the justices' order was dated June 21st, and the sessions' order was not till Michaelmas sessions. To this it was answered, that the appeal is to be to the next sessions after the parties find themselves aggrieved, which is not till the removal; and for aught that appears, Michaelmas sessions might be the next sessions after the aggrievance. And so held in Milbrooke v. St. John's, in Southampton, M. 1 Geo. I. To which the court agreed, and the sessions' order was confirmed.

But now the appeal may be made before the removal actually takes place. (See s. 77 of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, Appendix.)

Rex v. Devonshire, J. Cald. 32; 2 Bott, 961. A mandamus had been moved for to hear an appeal to an order of removal: the sessions had refused to enter into it, as one sessions had intervened since the removal. The order was dated October 21st, 1776; in November the pauper was removed; some time afterwards it was agreed between the two parishes, that the question should be decided by an opinion, provided such opinion was given before the 14th day of January, the sessions beginning on the 15th. It was also agreed, that no other instructions should be given to the counsel than the examination of the pauper, which was, that he was born in Witheridge, and about the age of seven years was bound to Richard Elworthy, of Witheridge, with whom he lived till twenty-one, and then made an agreement with his master to give him one guinea to discharge him from his apprenticeship. Elworthy gave him a discharge under his own hand: after different services he gained a settlement by hiring and service under Robert Salter, in Paddington, if he was so far discharged as to be capable of gaining a settlement by hiring and service. On the 10th of January the opinion was given; and was, "that if the indenture of apprenticeship remained in the master's hands uncancelled the apprenticeship still continued, and the agreement was no dissolution thereof, but only a licence to the apprentice to serve where he pleased." On this day the officers of Witheridge told the officers of Paddington, that as the opinion was not decisive, they must inquire of the master what had become of the indenture. At the sessions, on the 15th, no appeal was entered. At Easter sessions following Paddington appealed, but the justices refused to enter into it. A mandamus was moved for, on the ground that under the agreement the opinion in favour of Paddington was conclusive, and that Paddington had appealed in consequence of objections raised to this decision subsequent to the Epiphany Sessions, and therefore the statutory limitation of appeal to the next sessions ought, during the time the parties were under the terms of compromise, to be suspended: the court being satisfied of the appeal having been prevented in consequence of the objection not having been raised previous to the Epiphany Sessions. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "As both parties had agreed that this question should be submitted to counsel, and that his opinion should conclude, though the court does not quite agree with the counsel in point of law, they would not, had the opinion been positive, have granted the mandamus. Upon the point of law, I am of opinion, that if the indenture had not been destroyed, but remained in the master's hands, the apprentice would yet have gained a subsequent settlement in Paddington. The master received a guinea of his apprentice, then of full age, for the express purpose of vacating the indenture: why should the master after this have used the indenture against the apprentice? So far from it, that the apprentice might have brought an action against the master for it. But the opinion of the counsel was hypothetical only, and upon a state of facts at the time not settled and submitted to him by the parties. The case, therefore, might be considered as open to the interposition of the court. But the merits of the case appearing to be clearly against the party applying, the court, to prevent further litigation and expense, refused the rule; and on account of some misconduct with respect to the affidavits laid before the court by the prosecutors of the rule, directed that it should be discharged with costs out of pocket." Mandamus refused.

Rex v. The East Riding of Yorkshire, Doug. 192. The order had been made on the 22d of September, but the pauper was not removed till the 5th of October. Hull, the place to which the pauper had been removed from Whitby, is sixty miles from Northallerton, where the sessions began on the 6th of October; at which sessions no appeal was entered. At the Epiphany sessions Hull offered an appeal, but the justices refused to hear it. An appeal might have been entered at the Michaelmas sessions on the second or third day. The court said, that by next sessions the statute Car. II. must have meant the next possible sessions, and that here it was impossible for the appellants to lodge their appeal at the Michaelmas sessions. A mandamus granted.

Rex v. Justices of Esser, 1 B. & Ald. 210. Rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding the justices to receive and hear an appeal against an order of removal from Tolleshunt Knights to Washbrook. The order was made on Tuesday, the 8th July, 1817, and was served about twelve o'clock on the following Saturday. The distance between the respondent and appellant parishes was twenty-four miles, and the appellant parish was thirty-seven miles from Chelmsford, where the sessions were held on the Tuesday following, and lasted four days: and by the practice of that sessions a motion to enter and respite the appeal might have been made at any time during the sessions. The parish not having appealed at the July sessions, the justices refused to receive the appeal at the Michaelmas sessions. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The 13 & 14 Car. II. certainly directs the appeal to be at the next quarter sessions, but that must mean the next practicable sessions. The parish officers must have a reasonable time allowed them to make the necessary inquiries, that they may judge of the propriety of appealing or not. The notice here is served on the Saturday. I am of opinion that they are not bound to devote Sunday to such a purpose. They have then only one entire day, i. e. the Monday, to get the necessary information, and to consider whether they will appeal or not; and that, in my judgment, is not sufficient. It has been said, that although the appeal could not have been heard at those sessions, still that it ought to have been entered and respited; but that would only be incurring an useless expense, without conferring any benefit on either party, and was, therefore, quite unnecessary." Rule absolute.

When it is not necessary to enter and respite.

Many of the earlier cases (a) had determined, that it was necessary to enter and respite an appeal at the next sessions, although there was not time to try it then; a more reasonable rule was laid down in Rex v. The Justices of Devon (8 B. & C. 640). The order of removal from Upottery to Petminster was served on the 8th of April. The sessions were held on the 15th (b) of April, at Exeter. Petminster is eight miles from Upottery, and thirty miles from Exeter. The sessions require eight clear days' notice to try an appeal. An appeal may be entered and respited without notice. The appeal was not entered at the Easter sessions, but at the July sessions, when they refused to hear it. Lord Tenterden, C. J. said, "It is clear that in this case the appellant could not have tried his appeal at the April sessions, but it was contended that he ought to have entered it then, and adjourned it.

(a) Rex v. Herefordshire, 3 T. R. 504. The order was made on Friday, the 18th of April; on the 19th the pauper was removed; on Tuesday, the 22d, the sessions was held at Hereford, twenty miles distant from the parish to which the pauper was removed; at which sessions it is the practice not to receive any appeal after the Tuesday morning. The parish not having appealed at those Easter sessions, the justices at the Midsummer sessions refused to receive the appeal. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The words of the act of parliament are very strong, and they require the appeal to be made at the sessions next after the grievance. Where, indeed, an order of removal has been made some time before, and only executed a very short time before the sessions, so that there was no possibility of appealing to those sessions, this court has interfered, by granting a mandamus to compel the justices at the following sessions to receive the appeal; because the words 'next sessions' mean 'the next possible sessions.' But this is a very different case; for there were two intervening days after the execution of the order, and before the Easter sessions; and if there were not sufficient time, before those sessions, to give reasonable notice of appeal, the appeal might have been then entered and adjourned, according to 9 Geo. III. c. 7, s. 8." The other judges concurring—Rule discharged.

Rex v. The Justices of the West Riding of York, 4 M. & Sel. 327. An order of removal from a township in the West Riding to Saint Luke, in Middlesex, dated on the 3d of January, and executed on the 12th, and the Epiphany sessions for the West Riding were holden on the 18th. The parish of Saint Luke did not appeal to those sessions, but offered to appeal at the Easter sessions in April, when the justices refused to receive it. Le Blanc, J. (in the absence of the Chief Justice,) said, "We do not think that the parish were entitled strictly to pass over the first sessions; but if they had done at the second as much as they ought to have done, the court would have relieved them. The parish might possibly have gone, in the first instance, to the Epiphany sessions, but they have not done this, and have also not placed themselves in a situation to be heard at the second sessions; the court, therefore, do not see a sufficient ground for granting the mandamus." Rule discharged.

(b) The grounds of appeal must now be delivered fourteen days before the sessions. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 81, post.

The entry for an adjournment only is an useless act, and only occasions unnecessary expense. I think, therefore, he was not bound to enter it at those sessions. One inconvenience only can follow from our holding that it is not necessary under such circumstances to enter the appeal at the first sessions, viz. where the removal is made within eight days of the sessions, so that the parish to which the pauper is removed, cannot try their appeal at those sessions, the removing parish may not know of the intention of the other parish to appeal till within eight days before the second sessions. If that should prove an inconvenience, the sessions may remedy it by requiring under such circumstances a longer notice." Rule absolute for a mandamus.

Rex v. The Justices of Kent, 8 B. & C. 639; 3 M. & R. 15. The order of removal from Lenham to Pluckley was served on the 8th April. The sessions were on the 15th at Maidstone; they require eight clear days' notice to try an appeal. The appeal was first entered at the July sessions; when the order was served, the officer of Pluckley said they should appeal. The officers of Lenham observed that nothing could be done at the April sessions, because there were not eight clear days. The sessions in July refused to hear it. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We think it reasonable that the parish of Pluckley should have an opportunity of trying their appeal; they may probably have been misled by the observation of the officer of Lenham. Independently of that, it appears to me to have been wholly unnecessary to enter and adjourn the appeal at the first sessions, when they could not then try it." Mandamus granted.

Rex v. Southampton, 6 M. & Sel. 394. The order of removal from Ropley to Bentworth was made on the 2nd, and served on the 7th of January. The sessions were on the 14th at Winchester. Eight days' notice is necessary to have an appeal heard. Bentworth is five miles from Ropley, and fifteen from Winchester. The appeal was first entered at the Easter sessions, when they refused to hear it. Lord Ellenborough. "The order was made on the 2nd, and not served till the 7th. What prevented the order's being executed promptly? If it had been served immediately, the appellants might, for any thing that appears to the contrary, have gone to the first sessions and tried their case. The respondents having by their own act abridged the time, it seems reasonable that the appellants should be allowed to the next sessions, nunc pro tunc, for this purpose: for where delay has been caused by one party the most favourable construction should be adopted as regards the other." Abbott, J. "The effect of the delay was to prevent the appellants, if they had been so minded, from trying their appeal at the first sessions. Allowing that a satisfactory reason might be given for the delay, still the appellants ought not to be prejudiced by it." Mandamus granted.

Rex v. Surrey, 1 M. & Sel. 479. Order of removal from Richmond to Mortlake was dated the 11th of January, and executed in the afternoon of that day. The sessions for Surrey began on the 12th. The affidavit stated that there was not sufficient time to procure any information respecting the pauper, or the evidence to support an appeal; notice must be served of their intention to try such appeal, at least six clear days before the sessions. The sessions are always adjourned for a certain time, and appeals are allowed to be lodged at any time during the sitting of the sessions, or at the adjournment held next after the making such order, without requiring notice. The January sessions commenced on the 12th, and lasted fourteen days, when they were adjourned to the 2nd February, (which adjournment lasted one day,) and again adjourned to the 1st of March, which lasted two days. Newington, where the sessions were holden, was distant eight miles from Mortlake. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The statute does not contemplate the continuance of the sessions. It enacts that the party may appeal 'to the next quarter sessions,' without adding 'or some adjournment thereof.' It takes the holding of the sessions as the point of time to which it refers the appeal; and the sessions are always considered in law as one day, to whatever period they may by accidental causes be extended. The appellant parish ought to have a reasonable time allowed for considering whether they will appeal or not. The question is, whether the interval between the 11th

See also second point on Rex v. Carmarthen, 4 B. & A. 291, ante, 883, 884.

4. Entering Appeal after Executed Order is Superseded.

Where an order of removal has been executed, and by consent of the removing parish, and the magistrates making it, it is superseded, and the paupers taken back, it is in the discretion of the sessions to enter an appeal against it or not, according as they may think justice requires it, in order to compel the respondents to pay the costs of maintenance, &c., incurred by the appellants before the order was superseded.

4. ENTERING APPEAL AFTER EXECUTED ORDER IS SUPERSEDED.

Rex v. The Justices of Norfolk, 5 B. & Ald. 484; 1 D. & R. 69; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 17. A rule nisi was obtained for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal. The removal had taken place on the 22nd of August, and on the 5th of September notice of appeal was given. On the 10th of October, a supersedeas, under the hands and seals of the removing magistrates, was served on the officers of the appellant parish, stating, that doubts had been entertained, whether the order could be supported by legal evidence, and requiring them to deliver up the duplicate order to be cancelled, and also requiring the other party to take back the pauper. This was done at the instance of the respondents, the order having been founded on the examination of Edward George, taken under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 28, and that, he being a prisoner convicted and under sentence for larceny, his examination was not evidence, he himself not being an admissible witness until the expiration of his sentence. It did not appear whether the costs of maintenance between the 22nd of August and the 10th of October had been tendered by the respondents. On the 17th of October, application was made to the sessions for leave to enter the appeal, which was refused, the court being of opinion that the order was at an end. Pancras v. Rumbold was cited as an authority to show, that though the justices may supersede an order before, they cannot do so after it is executed. Bayley, J. "This is a very different case from Pancras v. Rumbold, which is only an authority to show that the justices having been surprised into making an order, may of their own authority, and without the consent of the removing parish, supersede it before execution, but not after. But in this case, there is the consent of the removing parish. The language of Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Diddlebury (post, 902,) puts it upon that very ground, for he says, 'There are two ways of getting rid of an order, one by consent of the parish in whose favour it is made to abandon it, the other by appeal;' and he adds afterwards, 'What objection can there be, as Lord Mansfield observed in Rex v. Llanrhydd (post, 901,) to a party's abandoning a judgment intended for his own benefit?' These observations show, that the consent of the removing parish alone is requisite. I think that in cases like this, the sessions may exercise a discretion, and enter the appeal or not, so as best to answer the purposes of justice. If the parties removing do not choose to pay the expenses of maintenance, incurred previously to the supersedeas, they may then enter the appeal, for the purpose of compelling them so to do. If they are willing to do it, the sessions may refuse to enter the appeal. Here the only object of entering it would be, either to obtain a decision from the sessions, in the absence of a material witness, or to respite the appeal from time to time. In the latter case, there would be an useless expense entailed upon the parties. As soon as George is discharged from prison a new order may be made; and it is better for the appellants that it should be so, for they will not be compelled to keep the family in the mean time. I think, therefore, that it was entirely in the discretion of the sessions to enter the appeal or not; and I do not see any ground why this court should interfere with their decision. This rule for a mandamus must be discharged." Best, J. "The principle upon which this court proceeds, in issuing the writ of mandamus, is to prevent a failure of justice. Here the very reverse would be the effect. For we should either compel the sessions to hear the case in the absence of the person who can give the most material information, or put the parties to the useless expense of obtaining respites from time to time, till his imprisonment be over." Rule discharged.

Where notice of appeal had been given for the first

Rex v. Monmouthshire, 1 Bar. & Ad. 895. An order having been made in August, 1830, for the removal of certain paupers from Aberystwith to Merthyr Tydvil, notice of appeal was duly served on the 8th of October, for the sessions to be held at Usk, in Monmouthshire, on the 18th, such notice being sufficient according to the practice of the sessions. The parties attended at Usk on the 18th, and at a late hour of the day the appeal not having then been entered, the appellants moved to enter and adjourn it on an affidavit stating the absence of a material witness. The respondents, who had come prepared to try and had received no countermand, opposed the granting of the motion, unless they were paid their costs of the day. The appellants offered forty shillings, the costs usually awarded by the practice of the sessions to the party succeeding on an appeal. The respondents declined this, but proposed to refer the amount to the clerk of the peace, and the court refused to allow the appeal to be entered and respited unless the appellants should agree to pay the costs of the day, this being conformable to the practice of the sessions in cases where due notice had been given and not countermanded. The appellants would not consent, and the appeal was not entered. A rule was obtained calling on the justices to show cause why they should not enter continuances and hear the appeal. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "Entering the appeal is a mere nothing. The motion was to enter and adjourn. The justices consented to respite if the appellants would pay the costs of the day. That being declined, I think the justices exercised a very proper discretion in refusing the adjournment. The rule must be discharged." The rest of the court concurred. Rule discharged with costs.

sessions, it was held that the court were not bound to enter and respite the appeal, except on such terms for the payment of costs by the appellants as their rules required.

5. OF ADJOURNMENT. (See post, tit. "Judgment.")

Rex v. King's Langley, 2 Salk. 605; 1 Lord Raym. 481. Upon an appeal against an order of removal, the justices adjourned the appeal for further consideration. And it was held by the whole court, they may well adjourn an appeal upon debate for further consideration.

5. Of Adjournment.

Adjourning an appeal for further consideration.

Bodmin v. Warligen, 2 Bott, 982. On an appeal against an order of removal, the justices were divided, and the clerk of the peace made an entry that the appeal was lodged, and nothing done in it. And the court held, that under these circumstances, the clerk of the peace ought to have entered an adjournment.

Where justices are divided.

Where the sessions itself is adjourned, the style of the sessions ought not to run, at such a sessions held by adjournment, but the time of the first meeting of the sessions ought to be set forth, and that the same was continued to such further time by adjournment, as in Rex v. Hinderclieve, 19 Vin. Abr. 356; 2 Bott, 956. An order made at the general quarter sessions of the peace, held by adjournment, was quashed, because it did not appear that this was the next general quarter sessions; for it might be that the sessions was begun and continued by adjournment before the order was made.

Style of the sessions where they are adjourned.

Rex v. Heptonstall, Burr, S. C. 88; 2 Bott, 731. The sessions was said to be holden on such a day by adjournment, and it did not appear when the original sessions was holden. Order was quashed for that cause.

Rex v. Polstead, 2 Stra. 1263; 2 Bott, 986. Appeal was made to the sessions in Suffolk, held April 7th, 1766, against an order of removal. The sessions was adjourned to April 9th, at Woodbridge, where for want of a sufficient number of justices nothing could be done. April 11th, a sessions was held at Ipswich, and adjourned to the 14th, at Bury, where the appeal was allowed. It was moved to quash the order of sessions, as made without jurisdiction, the sessions ending for want of an adjournment at Woodbridge. And of that opinion was the court; for the words in 2 Hen. V. c. 4, and more often if need be, were never considered as giving more than one original sessions in a quarter, but only empowering adjournments. The county must take notice of adjournments, but are not supposed to expect a new sessions till the usual time. And the order of sessions was quashed.

A quarter sessions once dropped cannot be resumed.

Rex v. West Torrington, Burr, S. C. 293. The sessions was held at Kirton; and from thence adjourned to Caistor, at which place no sessions was held pursuant to the said adjournment. Afterwards, a sessions was held at Horncastle; and the appeal was determined there. By the Court: "The sessions at Horncastle could not take up the appeal, for want of jurisdiction. A quarter sessions must be holden four times in a year, as directed by the statute; and it may be adjourned from time to time, and from place to place; but if it is once dropped, it cannot be resumed."

Road v. North Bradley, 2 Stra. 1168. A pauper was removed from Road to North Bradley. North Bradley gave notice of appeal; on which Road took him back, but however got their order confirmed at sessions. The next sessions set both aside as fraudulent. And now Road insisted that the order was good, as not being appealed from at the next quarter sessions: and as to the other, that it was not in the power of one sessions to set aside the act of the other. All being now before the court they quashed the first order, as being properly quashable on appeal; and would not take notice, that it was not at the next sessions after service of the order, which being in the case of a recent appeal, they would suppose to have been served too late for an appeal to the next sessions. And as to the order of confirmation, they quashed that, as not being made on any appeal, and, consequently, without jurisdiction; and at the same time quashed the latter part of the second sessions' order, that rescinded that confirmation, as not being properly before them.

6. OF NOTICE OF APPEAL.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 8, "No appeal or appeals from any order or orders of removal of any poor person or persons whatsoever, from any parish or place to another, shall be proceeded upon in any court or quarter sessions, unless reasonable notice be given by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of such parish or place who shall make such appeal, unto the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of such parish or place from which such poor person or persons shall be removed; the reasonableness of which notice shall be determined by the justices of the peace at the quarter sessions to which the appeal is made; and if it shall appear to them that reasonable time of notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the said appeal to the next quarter sessions, and then and there finally hear and determine the same."

But now overseers are required by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 81, (see Appendix) fourteen days before the sessions to give a statement of the grounds of appeal, and without it they cannot be heard, nor can they give evidence of any ground of appeal not there set forth in such statement. What is a sufficient statement will be seen by the following most important decisions, post, 891, 892.

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 81, "That after the 1st day of November, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, in every case where notice of appeal against such order shall be given, the overseers or guardians of the parish appealing against such order, or any three or more of such guardians, shall with such notice, or fourteen days at least before the first day of the sessions at which such appeal is intended to be tried, send or deliver to the overseers of the respondent parish a statement in writing under their hands of the grounds of such appeal; and it shall not be lawful for the overseers of such appellant parish to be heard in support of such appeal, unless such notice and statement shall have been so given as aforesaid: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the respondent or appellant parish, on the hearing of any appeal, to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of removal, or of appeal against any order of removal, than those set forth in such respective order, examination, or statement as aforesaid."

Sect. 82. "That upon every such appeal the court before whom the same shall be brought shall and may, if they think fit, order and direct the parish against which the same shall be decided to pay to the other such costs and charges as may to such court appear just and reasonable, and shall certify the amount thereof; and in case the overseers of the poor of the parish liable to pay the same, shall upon demand, and upon the production of such certificate, refuse or neglect to pay the same, the amount thereof may be recovered from such overseer in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are by this act recoverable."

Sect. 83. "That if either of the parties shall have included in the order or statement sent as hereinbefore directed any grounds of removal or of appeal, which shall in the opinion of the justices determining the appeal be frivolous and vexatious, such party shall be liable, at the discretion of the said justices, to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such grounds, such costs to be recovered in the manner hereinbefore directed as to the other costs incurred by reason of such appeal."

Rex v. Suffolk, 5 Nev. & Man. 503. A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus commanding the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal of the overseers of Manningtree against an order for the removal of a pauper from the parish of St. Margaret, in Ipswich, to Manningtree. The affidavits disclosed these facts: 17th September, 1835, the order of removal was made, a copy of which, together with a copy of the examinations, and a notice of chargeability was on the following day transmitted to the overseers of Manningtree; 9th of October, the overseers of Manningtree sent to the officers of the removing parish a notice of appeal for the next general quarter sessions to be holden for the borough of Ipswich, accompanied with a statement of the grounds of appeal; 13th October, the overseers of Manningtree discovering that they had erroneously given notice of appeal to the borough sessions, sent to the officers of the removing parish a notice of appeal for the next general quarter sessions to be holden for the county of Suffolk, and referred to the statement of the grounds of appeal sent with the former notice. By the practice and rules of the Suffolk quarter sessions eight days notice of appeal is sufficient. 23d October, the county sessions commenced, and the justices considering, that notwithstanding the practice of the sessions, notice of appeal ought under the Poor Law Amendment Act (4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76), to have been given within twenty-one days from the time of sending the notice of chargeability, &c., and that the notice of the 9th October was a nullity, refused to hear the appeal. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think that by this act it was not intended to interfere with the practice of the sessions. Such an intention, if it had been entertained, would have been expressed in plain terms. It appears to me therefore that the practice as to notices of appeal must stand exactly as it did before the act passed. The act requires that a statement of the grounds of appeal shall be given with the notice, or at least fourteen days before the commencement of the sessions. It appears to me that this was done on the 9th October, for that though the notice of appeal which accompanied the statement was a notice to the wrong sessions, yet the statement of the grounds of appeal was available to all purposes. As therefore the notice was in due time according to the practice of the sessions, and the statement of the grounds of appeal was sufficiently early under the act of parliament, the sessions ought to have entertained the appeal." Patteson, J. "The notice on the 9th of October stated the grounds of appeal. That is a compliance with the act. If it be an absurdity that the statement of the grounds of appeal is required to be given earlier than the notice need be given, then it is an absurdity introduced by the act of parliament itself." Williams, J. "The only novelty introduced by the 79th section of the act is, that the pauper shall not be actually removed within twenty-one days, unless with consent, nor if there be a notice of appeal within that period, until the time for prosecuting the appeal has expired, or the appeal has been heard and determined. That is the only change effected by that section. And the novelty introduced by the 81st section is, that a statement of the grounds of appeal must be sent or delivered to the respondent parish at least fourteen days before the sessions. That has been effectively done here. Whether timely notice of appeal was given depends upon the practice of these particular sessions, which stands as it did before the passing of the poor law amendment act." Coleridge, J. "It is admitted that there was no notice within the twenty-one days, therefore if Mr. Andrews is right in his argument, that the 79th section imperatively requires every notice of appeal to be given within the twenty-one days, the sessions have acted properly in refusing to entertain

6. Of Notice of Appeal.

Party making frivolous and vexatious statement to pay costs.

Under 79 sect. of Poor Law Amendment Act, notice of appeal against an order of removal need not be given within twenty one days from the time of sending the notice of chargeability and the copies of the order and examination to the overseers of the parish charged by such order: Held, that the practice as to notices of appeal not being expressly altered by the act remains as before, although s. 81 requires the statement of the grounds of appeal to be delivered with such notice at least fourteen days before the sessions.

the appeal. The words of the statute do not in my opinion require the notice of appeal to be given within the twenty-one days. I think it quite clear that it was never intended to go that length. The mischief intended to be provided against, was the immediate removal of paupers. Paupers were de facto removed immediately upon the making of the order of removal, without previous communication with the parish charged by the order, and without giving any time for investigating the removal. The intention was only to prevent a removal within twenty-one days. The words of the act are only that the pauper shall not be 'removed, or removeable, &c.' It does not say that there shall be no appeal, unless a notice of the intention to appeal be given within twenty-one days. If this had been intended the obvious course would have been to have inserted plain words to that effect. Then with regard to the 81st section. We are called upon to make a general alteration in the practice of all the courts of quarter sessions in the kingdom, upon the ground of a mere implication arising out of a supposition that some absurdity will be introduced if the practice be not so altered. The section does not say that the notice shall be given fourteen days before the sessions or at any particular time. I think that the obvious meaning of the act is, that where any greater time than fourteen days is required by the sessions for the notice of appeal, then you may deliver the statement of grounds with your notice, or if not, that you should deliver the statement of grounds at least fourteen days before the sessions. If any practical absurdity does arise out of this enactment, it is one which we cannot remedy." Rule absolute.

A notice of appeal stating that the paupers were settled in the respondent parish, is a sufficient statement of the ground of appeal.

Rex v. Justices of Cornwall, K. B. Trin. Term, A. D. 1836. The overseers of the parish of St. Gluvias, in Cornwall, gave notice to the overseers of the parish of Penryn, in the same county, dated 21st March, 1826, that they intended at the next general quarter sessions for the county to prosecute an appeal against an order of two justices for and concerning the removal of Charles Halooso and Charlotte his wife, and William, Asinath, and Emily, son and daughters of the said Charlotte by a former husband, from Penryn to St. Gluvias, and that the grounds and reasons of the said appeal are that the said Charles Halooso was not bound an apprentice, (taking different objections to the removal of Halooso,) and also that the said William, Asinath, and Emily, the son and daughters of the said Charlotte, the wife of the said Charles Halooso, by a former husband, are and each of them is now settled in the said borough of Penryn, &c. The order of removal stated that Halooso, and Charlotte his wife, and William, now aged about 12 years, Asinath, now aged about 11 years, and Emily, now aged about seven years, son and daughters of the said Charlotte by a former husband, neither of which said children hath gained a settlement in his or her own right, have come to inhabit in the said borough of Penryn, that Halooso and his wife had not gained a settlement there nor produced a certificate, and that the father had become actually chargeable to Penryn, and adjudged that the lawful settlement of Halooso and his wife was in St. Gluvias, and ordered the removal of the said Charles Halooso and Charlotte his wife, and William, and Asinath, and Emily, her children, as part of the family of the said Charles Halooso, from Penryn to Gluvias. By the examination of Charlotte Halooso before the justices, it appeared that her former husband belonged to the said borough, and that neither of the three children had done any act to gain a settlement in his or her own right, that the said children were living with Charlotte Halooso and her present husband. When the appeal came on to be heard, the sessions received the evidence respecting the settlement of Charles Halooso, but refused to hear any evidence against the removal of the children, except so far as depended upon the settlement of Charles Halooso, on the ground that it was not stated in the appeal how the children were settled in Penryn, and removal was confirmed. Lord Denman, C. J. "This rule must be made absolute. The sessions have refused to hear a case, raising an important point, because the notice does not state how the children were settled in the respondent parish. Sir W. W. Follett contends that the notice must be construed with reference to the order and examination, and that in connection with them it has full information. Without settling the question on that ground, we think it better to state that we think the notice sufficient in itself. The appellants say that they mean to dispute the order on the ground of the children being settled in another parish. That is sufficient to draw the attention of the respondents to the settlement there." Littledale, J. "I think this notice sufficient. Under the old law it was sufficient to give notice of appeal without stating the grounds. Such a statement is now made necessary. Formerly there might be doubt as to the nature of the case to be set up, but now a notice like the present confines the party giving it to proof of a settlement in the parish named and is a compliance with the provisions of the act." Patteson and Williams, Js. concurred. Rule absolute. (a)

The court of sessions have a right to make rules to fix the time when notice of appeal shall be given, (see Rex v. Justices of Devon, ante, 886.) In some counties fourteen days' notice is required, in others eight days; in others, it is to be given on or before the Monday in the week next before the sessions. Hence it was necessary in each case to inquire into the practice of each quarter sessions.

Rex v. J. of Huntingdonshire, Cald. 283; 2 Bott, 948. Upon a removal of a pauper, the notice of appeal was served upon a Sunday: had the appellants deferred the service of their notice till another day, they would not have been in time, under the practice established in that court, to have given reasonable notice for the purpose of trying the merits. The sessions (being of opinion that the party aggrieved was not at any rate, or for any purpose entitled to appeal, unless the prescribed notice had previously been given; and also that a service of a notice on a Sunday was not a legal service, and that in point of law there had not been any notice,) refused to hear, adjourn, or enter the appeal. A rule was obtained for mandamus to receive and hear the appeal, and no cause being shown was made absolute.

Rex v. J. of Gloucestershire, Doug. 191; 2 Bott, 727. On application for a mandamus to receive an appeal, it appeared from the affidavits, that the examination of the pauper was taken in August, the order of removal the 12th of November following, and the sessions were held on the 12th of January in the ensuing year: that no notice of appeal had been served (for which the reason assigned was that the appellants had not been able to get their witnesses ready till it was too late to give such notice), that the court had been moved to receive the appeal, and adjourn the consideration of it till the following sessions, and had refused. The court were clearly of opinion, that the justices ought to have received the appeal, and the rule for a mandamus was made absolute.

Rex v. J. of Bucks, 3 East, 343. It was determined, that where notice had been given, and if upon an appeal lodged against the order of removal, the sessions were of opinion that reasonable notice had not been given by the appellant to the respondent parish, they could not dismiss the appeal on the ground that notice might have been given in time, but were bound by the direction of the stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 8, to adjourn the appeal to the next sessions. (N. B. This case overruled that of Rex v. Yorkshire, 3 T. R. 150, but see the reason given in that case for the refusal and the observations of Lord Tenterden, Rex v. Wiltshire, 8 B. & C. 380; 2 M. & R. 401; post, 894.)

Rex v. J. of Shropshire, (erroneously reported Rex v. J. of Staffordshire, 7 East, 549.) An appeal was lodged at the next sessions after an order of removal made, and was moved to be adjourned, on the part of the appellants, no notice having been given to the respondents; but the sessions being of opinion there had been sufficient time for the appellants to have given notice of such, after the order had been executed, and before the holding of the sessions, dismissed the appeal. Whereupon a rule was obtained for a mandamus to enter a continuance to the next sessions, and hear the appeal. No opposition was made; it was considered (b) that Rex v. J. of the North Riding of Yorkshire had been over-ruled by Rex v. J. of Bucks. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, that "the latter case had been well considered, and that the court were satisfied that the statute was compulsory on the sessions in these cases to receive and adjourn the appeal." Rule absolute.

In Rex v. Wiltshire (ante, 221), Lord Tenterden, C. J. said, "It appears to me, upon the sound construction of 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, that where there is time, between the allowance of the rate and the next sessions, for a reasonable notice of appeal to be given, and no notice is given, the justices not only may, but ought to reject the appeal, and not suffer it to be entered at all. But where they do suffer it to be entered, I think they have most clearly the power of adjourning or respiting it; for such a power is incident to their character as a court of justice." (And see Rex v. Justices of Monmouth, 1 B. & Ad. 895 (ante, 888).

Rex v. J. of Wiltshire, 10 East, 404. This was an application for a mandamus to enter continuances upon the appeal of Stourton against an order of removal from Mere, in Wiltshire, and to hear the appeal. By an affidavit of the appellant's attorney, living at Wincaunton in Somerset, it appeared that he was applied to by the officers of S. on the 19th of April last, to enter the appeal and get it respited until the next sessions, in consequence of which notice of appeal, and of the intended motion to respite, was given to the respondents; the next sessions was held on the 26th of April, when the appeal was entered and respited to the Midsummer sessions, which was held at Warminster on the 12th of July; on the 2nd of July the appellant's attorney learnt, for the first time, that the sessions had made certain rules for their practice, which were not published till after the April sessions, nor acted upon, nor officially circulated, till the Midsummer sessions, by which it was required that, on all trials of appeals, the notice of trial was to be given on or before the Monday in the week next before the sessions, otherwise the notice to be deemed insufficient, and that the like notice was to be given in the case of respited appeals, unless, &c. On Tuesday, the 5th of July, notice of trial of the appeal was served on the respondents, at six o'clock in the morning, dated the day before, being as soon as the signatures of the parish officers could be obtained. The usual notice theretofore required in such cases, in this and the neighbouring counties, was given in this case. The appeal was called on, when the respondents objected that the notice had not been given in time. The appellants then applied for an adjournment under the circumstances, offering to pay the costs of the day; but the court refused it, thinking they had no power to do so. Affidavits were read in answer, alleging that the new order of practice was made at the preceding January sessions, held at Devizes; and that notice of it was immediately after promulgated in the county; that the appellant's attorney lived only five miles from S., though in the county of Somerset; and that the litigating parishes were very near to each other. Lord Ellenborough, the next sessions, held on the 13th of January, and moved the court for leave to lodge the appeal, and to respite the hearing thereof to the next sessions. The following entry was made by the sessions: "Forasmuch as it appears to this court that there has been sufficient time since the removal of the paupers for the appellants to give notice and come prepared to try this appeal at this sessions, and no cause shown why they did not proceed accordingly, it is ordered that the motion for lodging the same, and respiting the hearing to the next quarter sessions, be rejected." The court were of opinion that the justices had not acted wrong; for the motion was in effect to adjourn the appeal. And it was evidently the intention of the parties not to enter the appeal, unless the court would adjourn it. The justices are to judge of the reasonableness of the time; and in some counties they establish a rule regulating the time of notice. Here it appears that the order of removal was executed on the 28th of November; so that there was sufficient time for the appellants to give notice and to come prepared to try it; and the justices, who are the judges of this, thought so. Rule for mandamus discharged.

(a) It is not correct to say this court sets its discretion against that of the sessions. Parke, J., 5 B. & Ad. 671; Rex v. Yorkshire, J.

C. J. "The magistrates certainly had a discretion to exercise with respect to what was reasonable time for giving the notice of appeal; but we have also a kind of visitatorial jurisdiction over them, in the exercise of such discretionary power; and we think that in this case they have not exercised that discretion in a way that we ought to give effect to; but that we ought to interfere and correct it. Here it appeared that a new rule of practice, with respect to giving notice, had been recently made by the sessions, of which the appellant's attorney had no knowledge, but he conformed himself to the former practice; and, under these circumstances, it would be too much to conclude the appellants from having their case heard." Rule absolute. [Though by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 13, the appeal was to be lodged at the next quarter sessions, yet when it was so lodged, the justices might have adjourned it toties quoties the purpose of justice required. Vide Rex v. Lumley, 2 Salk. 605. And there is nothing in 9 Geo. I. to restrain their general power in this respect, but rather to compel the adjournment, if the first notice has not been given.]—(Mr. East's note.)

Rex v. Monmouthshire, 3 Dowl. P. C. 306. Talbot had obtained a rule, calling upon the justices of Monmouthshire to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal. By an order of removal, dated May 28th, 1834, a pauper was removed from the parish of Bedwellty, in the county of Monmouth, to the hamlet of Rhyndwyclydach Lower, in the county of Glamorgan. At the following sessions, which were held at Usk on the 30th of June, an appeal against the said order was entered and respited in the usual manner by the agents for the attorney for the appellants, and who had received a letter from him, directing them so to enter and respite the appeal. No notice was given to the respondents previous to such entry and respite; but on the 30th of September following the agents received a letter, inclosing a notice of appeal, which notice was forwarded by them, by the same day's post, to the attorney for the respondents. By the practice of the Monmouthshire sessions, eight days notice is required in common appeals, and fourteen days notice in respited appeals. The Michaelmas sessions were held at Usk on the 14th of October; it was therefore admitted that the notice of appeal was served too late, in consequence of which notice was given by the appellants to the respondents, that they should move to adjourn the appeal at the ensuing sessions. Accordingly at those sessions the appellants did so move; when the court, exclusive of the chairman, being equally divided in opinion, he gave the casting vote against the appeal being adjourned. Mr. Jenkins, the attorney for the appellants, stated in his affidavit that he was wholly ignorant of the practice of the Monmouthshire sessions, never having tried an appeal at them; and that he never heard that fourteen days notice of appeal, in case of adjourned appeals, was necessary, until he was so informed by a letter, dated the 30th of September, from his agents. The affidavit against the rule stated that Messrs. M'Donnell and Moslyn had been in practice for many years at Usk, where the sessions were always held, and were well acquainted with the practice of those sessions. Patteson, J. "The question here is, to what extent the court will interfere with the jurisdiction, and with the exercise of the discretion of the sessions. Though a doubt was raised last term, whether the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 8, applied to a subsequent sessions, I take it to be a settled rule, at least I always thought so, that it only applied to the first sessions. The extent to which the court will interfere with the sessions is a matter that I do not like to determine at once. In Rex v. Wilts (ante, 894), the judges seem to have gone a long way; but in Rex v. W. R. Yorkshire, Parke, J. stated that he did not approve of the observations in that case, that the sessions were judges of what was reasonable notice. Now if the court, in the case of Rex v. Wilts, means only that we might interfere where there is no rule, it is quite right: if it means that we are to interfere in all cases where there is an existing rule, I should have considerable doubt." Cur. adv. vult. Patteson, J. "I have considered this case; I think it seems to have been agreed on both sides that the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 8, does not apply to the present case; that section unquestionably applies

6. Of Notice of Appeal.

The 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 8, only applies to the first sessions after executing the order of removal; and therefore the court will not interfere with the discretion of the magistrates at the second as to adjournment, if it is in furtherance of a reasonable practice.

6. Of Notice of Appeal.

only to the first sessions; and that section gives no jurisdiction further than this, whether the notice is a reasonable notice or not: but it goes on to say, that, if it is not a reasonable notice, then the justices are to adjourn the appeal. They must adjourn it. In this case there was no notice at the first sessions, therefore the statute was entirely out of the question. The whole matter, therefore, depends on whether this court can interfere where the magistrates have laid down a rule, and have chosen to act upon the rule. Rex v. Wilts has been a good deal relied upon. That case is certainly one in which some of the expressions have been, I will not say found fault with, but cautiously abstained from in later cases, because the judges thought they went too far; that case proceeded entirely on this, that there was a new practice only existing for two sessions, doing away with the former practice, and the attorney had acted in ignorance of that practice, and the court thought that the sessions had acted wrongly. How far there would be a similar decision now may be doubtful. But this case is not like that. Here there is no suggestion that the practice is a new practice; and I cannot say that that practice is an illegal practice. The practice requires eight days' notice of an original appeal, and fourteen days' notice of an adjourned appeal: why more should be required in the latter case than in the former I do not see." [Greaves, Counsel, "It is founded on this ground, that the respondents may naturally expect to have an appeal at the first sessions after the order, and therefore eight days' notice will be sufficient; but if the appellants pass by the first sessions, the respondents will be lulled into security, and therefore are fairly entitled to a longer notice at the second sessions."] Patteson, J. "I suppose that may be so. There is nothing illegal in it. There is nothing so absurd in it as to require us to lay it down that it is not good. If the sessions have thought fit to lay it down, they may abide by it. It was for the sessions to determine whether they would adjourn. The sessions seem to have differed in opinion, but that is immaterial. It was in the exercise of their discretion whether they would adjourn. It was purely a matter of discretion. Undoubtedly, there was no great hardship on the attorney; he was a stranger, but he ought to have informed himself of the practice of the sessions where the case was to come on. Mr. Talbot relied on Rex v. W. R. Yorkshire. There there was a special act, allowing an appeal upon giving ten days' notice of appeal, and nothing was said about that appeal, supposing it to be adjourned. The sessions refused to adjourn; and this court said that the sessions were wrong, because there was no practice, which there could not be, as to that appeal. There was no general practice brought to the notice of the court, and therefore they held that the sessions had acted wrongly in refusing to hear the appeal, there being nothing at all to show that the party desirous of appealing was to give a notice at the second sessions. Here there is a distinct practice of requiring such a notice." Rule discharged, with costs.

Mandamus to enter continuances, and hear appeal when too long. Notice of appeal required by practice of sessions fourteen days.

Rex v. Lancashire, J., 7 B. & C. 691. On an application for a mandamus to enter continuances, and hear an appeal, the attorney for the appellant stated in his affidavit that the order was removed, and his instructions given too late to try his appeal at the July sessions in 1827. It was lodged and respited then. On the 8th of October he gave notice of appeal to the sessions held October 22nd. By a rule of sessions made in 1816, fourteen days' notice, exclusive of the day of notice and the day of holding, was required. The attorney thought that the fourteen days were to be calculated one exclusive, and the other inclusive. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We think that justice will be most satisfactorily administered by ordering the justices to enter continuances, and hear this appeal. They certainly have a discretionary power to make rules for the governance of the practice of the sessions, but the case cited (Rex v. Wiltshire, J. ante, 894,) shows that this court, for the purposes of justice, will interfere to control that discretion." Mandamus granted.

No notice of appeal is required where the respite takes place at the Rex v. Lindsey, 6 M. & Sel. 379. An order of removal from Messingham to Tickhill was made on the 7th of January, 1817. On the 11th, Tickhill gave notice of appeal. At the sessions the respondents moved to adjourn the appeal, on account of the absence of a witness, and it was adjourned. At the following sessions the respondents objected that no notice of appeal for that sessions had been given; and the order was confirmed without a hearing. By the rules of the sessions in all cases of appeal, not otherwise directed by law, ten days' notice in writing is required, and in case of respited appeals the like notice is given, unless the parties agree to the contrary. Lord Ellenborough, "The appeal was adjourned at the instance of the respondents, who now require notice; but have they not, in effect, had notice? the object of giving notice is to inform a person of that which he may, otherwise, remain ignorant; but a person cannot be supposed to be ignorant of that which is done at his own request, and for his own convenience." Bayley, J. "The practice of the sessions does not apply to this case, but only to the common case of entry and respiting an appeal. In many cases parties enter and respite an appeal as a matter of course, not having satisfied themselves of all the facts of the case. But here the appellants were ready and in condition to try, and but for the application of the respondents, would have tried their appeal. Then the respondents desire to respite it, which is, in effect, an agreement that they will be ready at the next sessions to try it without notice."

instance of the respondents.

Rex v. Gloucestershire, 3 Dowl. 298. Justice showed cause against a rule nisi obtained by Greaves for a mandamus to be directed to the justices of Gloucestershire, commanding them to enter continuances, and hear an appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper. The facts disclosed in the affidavits on both sides were in substance as follows:—The order of removal was made in March, 1834, and regular notice of appeal was given for the Easter sessions. At those sessions, upon the application of the appellants, the appeal was adjourned, upon an affidavit of the illness of a material witness for the appellants, after the court had heard counsel on both sides, the appellants paying the costs of the day. A second notice of appeal was given for the July sessions, which was too late by two days, if the rules of the sessions applied to this case. Those rules required notice on all trials of appeal to be given on or before the Thursday in the week next before the sessions; and the like notice in the case of respited appeals. Another rule required the appellants to produce the pauper, on the trial of the appeal, or the order would be confirmed. Within a few days of the July sessions the pauper was confined, and thereby rendered incapable of being produced at those sessions; in consequence of which the appellants, on an affidavit of these facts, moved to adjourn the appeal again, when it was objected that the appellants could not be heard; first, on the ground that the notice was too short; and, secondly, on the ground that the pauper was not produced. The sessions refused to adjourn the appeal, and confirmed the order. Cur. adv. vult. Littledale, J. afterwards sent an intimation to the crown office, that he was of opinion that the rule for the mandamus ought to be made absolute; but giving no other reason than "I thought the notice sufficient." Rule absolute.

If a regular notice of appeal has been given for one sessions, and the appeal be adjourned at the instance of the appellants, after hearing counsel on both sides, it is not necessary to give a strictly regular notice of trial for the following sessions.

proceedings relating to parish matters, all objections to the competency of any witness, on the score of interest, or by executing any office, are removed.

There is a similar provision in 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. s. 100. See Appendix.

See the decisions on this act in Meredith v. Gilpin, 6 Price, 146; and see also 1 B. & Ald. 87; 2 Stark. R. 215; Rex v. Hayman, M. & M. 401; Marsden v. Stansfield, 7 B. & C. 815; 1 M. & R. 669; and Rex v. Bishop's Auckland, 1 A. & E. 744.

In Slocomb v. St. John, 29th August, 1829, on an issue to try whether the parish of Putney were to appoint both churchwardens, or whether the minister, by custom, is to appoint one, Sir J. A. Park held, that a rated inhabitant of the parish is a competent witness to prove that the parish elects both churchwardens, saying, that the principal object of the act, on the face of it, appears to relate to the poor, yet the words "election or appointment of officers" are very general.

In Oxenden v. Palmer it was held, that an inhabitant of a parish is not, either at common law or under this act, a competent witness to prove the right of surveyors of highways in a parish to take beach from the sea shore in order to repair highways.

A witness in a settlement case having admitted that he had rateable property in the township, which was at that time prima facie a disqualification, was allowed to prove on the voire dire that he was not actually rated. (a)

A pauper competent to prove his own settlement, and his master not.

A pauper is a competent witness, and may be examined as to the fact whether he had ever gained a settlement, or whether there was a reasonable ground to conclude that he had gained a settlement in the appellant parish by apprenticeship or otherwise. Per Bayley, J. in Rex v. Yarwell, 9 B. & C. 895; 4 M. & R. 685; and per Ashhurst, J. in Rex v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 720.

A rated inhabitant is to be considered as a party to an appeal between his parish and another touching the settlement of a pauper, and cannot be compelled to give evidence against his parish, even since the stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 37, not being within the words or meaning of that law.

Rex v. Woburn, 10 East, 395, 402. Upon an appeal by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Alban, against an order for the removal of Mary Brown from Woburn to St. Alban, J. Hilliard, an inhabitant of the appellants' parish of St. Alban, and rated and paying to the poor rates of the said parish, was called as a witness on the part of the respondents, and refused to give evidence. The sessions were of opinion that John Hilliard was not compellable to give evidence, and quashed the said order, subject to the opinion of the court on this point. The court said, that the question being of general consequence, as involving the construction of the late act, they would advise upon it before they delivered their opinion. And Le Blanc, J. observed "That if the sessions had been aware at the time of the extent of the question, there would have been no difficulty: for if the witness were rejected on the ground of his being a party to the suit, his declaration of any facts touching the matter in issue would necessarily have been evidence against him."

On a question of settlement, a mortgagee, a rated inhabitant of the appellant parish, subpoenaed by the respondent parish, is not compellable under a subpœna duces tecum to produce the title-deeds of his mortgagor, nor can his attorney be allowed to produce an abstract of the deeds, nor to give parol evidence of their contents.

Rex v. Upper Boddington, 8 D. & R. 726. Two justices, by their order, removed Ann Leigh, widow, and her three children, from Upper Boddington to Staverton. Order quashed. Case:—Joseph Leigh, the pauper, Ann's late husband, was the son of George and Isabella Leigh, who for many years after the year 1776 resided in a house in the appellant parish. Notice had been given on the part of the respondent parish to a Mr. Thomas Hands, to the parish officers, and to their attorney, subpœna duces tecum served on Mr. Thomas Hands to produce at the trial all and every the deeds, papers, and writings relating to a certain messuage, cottage, or tenement and premises situate and being in Staverton aforesaid, heretofore the property of and belonging to George Leigh and Isabella his wife, or one of them, late of Joseph Leigh, deceased, and now of Richard and George Leigh, and lately on mortgage to the representatives of Mr. John Liddall, deceased, and particularly certain indentures of lease and release bearing date respectively the 8th and 9th of April, 1776, the release being tripartite, and made between Elizabeth Isham, spinster, second daughter and devisee of the last will and testament of William Isham, late of Staverton, weaver, deceased, of the first part, the said George Leigh, and Isabella, his wife, and the said Joseph Leigh, therein described as the only son and heir apparent of the said George Leigh by the said Isabella his wife, of the second part, and John Leigh, of Upper Boddington, weaver, and Henry Burditt, of Staverton, shoemaker, of the third part; which deeds it was contended would, when produced, prove a conveyance of the said house to the said George Leigh. The deeds of lease and release of 8th and 9th of April, 1776, were, before the removal of the pauper, in the hands of Mrs. Ann Marriott, as a mortgagee, at which time an abstract of them was made by a clerk of her solicitor, by the solicitor's direction. Afterwards these deeds came into the possession of Mr. Thomas Hands, as assignee of the said mortgage. Mr. Hands appeared in court in compliance with the subpoena, with a parcel of deeds, but objected to produce the one in question, as it formed one of the title-deeds of his property; and the court held that he was not bound to produce it. The respondents then called the clerk, who made the abstract. He proved that the deed from which the abstract was made consisted of a lease and release, though he did not particularly notice with what stamp; and it appeared to have been duly executed. The respondents then tendered the abstract as secondary evidence of the contents of the deed, or offered to give parol evidence of its contents by the clerk. To this evidence the appellants objected, and the court refused to receive it, and quashed the order of removal. Bayley, J. "I am clearly of opinion that the decision of sessions was right upon both points, and that their order therefore must be confirmed. Hands was a party to the appeal, and as such was not compellable by the adverse parish, by whom he was called, to give evidence at all. He was also interested as a mortgagee in the deeds, and as their production might by possibility have put his interest in jeopardy, he was justified in refusing to produce them. The deeds themselves not being produced, secondary evidence of their contents was certainly admissible; but then that secondary evidence must have been of an unexceptionable nature in point of law. Was the secondary evidence offered in this case of such a nature? Clearly not. The abstract was made by the attorney of a former mortgagee of the premises, of which the deeds constituted the title; and those deeds had come into Mr. Hand's possession as the assignee of that mortgagee. It was therefore an abstract made by an attorney for the purposes eventually of Mr. Hands, and as it remained in that attorney's possession after Mr. Hands became the mortgagee, must be taken to have been deposited there by him, and for his use and benefit, and the attorney was not at liberty to produce it. If so, it follows that the attorney could not be at liberty to give evidence of the contents either of the deeds or the abstract, because the whole of those contents were a confidential communication between a client and his attorney, and therefore privileged from disclosure; and as to the attorney's clerk, he stood precisely in the same situation as his master. I think it would be opening a door to great abuse of the confidence necessarily reposed by the client in his legal adviser, if we were to hold such evidence as this admissible." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Ashcomb, Hil. Term, 1820. The case stated the respondents produced their own churchwarden as a witness in support of their case. And the court being of opinion that the said witness, as a party to the appeal, is incompetent to give evidence therein, and the respondents not having produced any other evidence to establish a settlement in the appellant parish, this order is quashed, subject, &c., as to the admissibility of the churchwarden's testimony. Rule absolute for quashing the order of sessions.

The same point was raised in a case between Ashill v. Aylesbear, in 1831, but the case was abandoned.

See also Rex v. Hardwicke, 11 East, 557, where it was held that the declaration of a rated inhabitant was admissible, although it is exceedingly weak evidence in the case of a settlement. And the admissibility was determined on the principle that the inhabitants are substantially the parties to the appeal.

A churchwarden, though respondent, is a witness for his own parish.

7. Of Evidence.

The declaration is admissible, though the party who made it is alive. (Woolway v. Rowe, 3 Nev. & M. 849; 1 Ad. & Ell. 114.)

1. How far it is final. (b)

Order not appealed against is final; and there can be no second order reversing the first, excepting by appeal.

Parish, upon whom an original order is made, cannot remove till that be reversed.

A second order must be obtained where a settlement has been completed since the first order.

The original order is, when unappealed from, conclusive. (c)

Except where the removal is to a place that does not maintain its own poor separate.

1. HOW FAR IT IS FINAL.

Malendine v. Hunsdon, Fol. 273. Two justices, by an order, send some persons to Hunsdon; two justices there, by an order, send them back again. By the court: "They ought to have appealed, and not sent them back; and held the order of the first two justices to be good, because there was no appeal against it."

Chalbury v. Chipping Farringdon, 2 Salk. 488. A person was removed, by an order from a parish in Warwickshire to Chalbury; from thence, by an order, to Chipping Farringdon. It was objected, that Chalbury ought to have appealed, and got the order upon them discharged; to which Holt, C. J., agreed; for sending the man to another place is falsifying the first order, which cannot be done but by appeal; for the order is a determination of the right against all persons, till it be reversed. Chalbury should have appealed from the Warwickshire order, and got that set aside, and sent the man back thither; and the justices there should have sent him to Chipping Farringdon. Therefore the latter order was naught."

Rex v. Widworthy, Andr. 4 (ante, 690.) If a person has an inchoate right of settlement in the parish removing him (ex. gra. as being entitled, when so removed, to administration of an estate in the parish,) which he afterwards perfects (by obtaining a grant of administration) before the appeal against the order of removal is heard, this does not authorize the sessions to quash such order. The proper course, in such case, is to remove him back by a new order. (And see Rex v. Willoughby, ante, 416, 649.)

Rex v. Leverington, Burr. S. C. 276; 2 Bott, 935. Removal from Sutton St. Mary's, to Leverington; and no appeal: and the sessions confirmed the order. Four months after the first order, a second order was made to remove the pauper from Leverington to Sutton St. Nicholas; which second order was confirmed upon appeal. By the court: "The second order, and the order of sessions confirming it, were quashed, and the first order was confirmed; for L. was bound by the first order unappealed from, unless some subsequent settlement appears, and four months is not a sufficient distance of time, whereupon to ground a presumption of having acquired a new settlement. And the order of sessions confirming the first order was quashed, as being a voluntary and extra-judicial act of the sessions, to confirm an order which was not complained of. A resolution to the same effect in Godalmin v. St. Michael's, Winchester, 13 Geo. II., was mentioned by the court.

But in Rex v. Swalcliffe, Cald. 248; 2 Bott, 896, where T. Hawkins and his wife were removed from Swalcliffe to Stourton, the sessions quashed the order, and stated specially, that the pauper was born at Swalcliffe; that in January, 1782, he was moved from Swalcliffe to Ascott, a large populous village, part of the parish of Whichford, and maintaining its poor in common with Whichford: Ascott did not appeal, and Swalcliffe filed the order at the Epiphany sessions, 1782, for safe custody. The pauper and his wife coming again into Swalcliffe, and not having acquired any subsequent settlement, Swalcliffe obtained the first-mentioned order, and sent the paupers to Stourton, where he had gained a settlement by hiring and service. It was contended, an order is conclusive only when directed to a place to which a removal can legally be made, and where there is to be found some person legally authorized to appeal; yet that here were no officers to act: that to omit to do a thing which was impossible to be done could not be conclusive upon any one: that Whichford could not in this case appeal; for not being parties, they were not entitled to be heard. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The removal to Ascott was, in truth, no removal at all; there was no reason for an appeal; it was a mere nullity." Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. Denbighshire, J. ante, 849.)

Rex v. Chilverscoton, 8 T. R. 178. W. Fennel removed from Sow to Chilverscoton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, in 1779, married his present wife in Bedworth, where he then resided; they were afterwards removed to Sow by order: "To the churchwardens, &c. of Bedworth, in the county of Warwick, and to the churchwardens, &c. of Sow, in the county of the city of Coventry; whereas complaint has been made by you, the churchwardens, &c. of Bedworth, unto us whose hands and seals are hereunto set, two of his majesty's justices of the peace (whereof one is of the quorum), for the county aforesaid, (a) that W. Fennel, E. his wife, &c." [The other parts were regular; it was dated 16th March, 1779. No county was mentioned in the margin.] Against this order there was no appeal. In May, 1779, a certificate was granted by Sow to Bedworth, acknowledging the pauper to be settled in Sow, but, at the time of granting this certificate, no settlement had been gained in Sow, unless the above order from Bedworth to Sow had conferred one; but the pauper's settlement had always continued at Chilverscoton. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It should appear upon the face of the order, that the justices who made it had jurisdiction; which, if they had, every fair presumption will be made that they decided rightly; but if they had not, the proceeding is a nullity. It is said, however, that the parish of Sow ought not to be permitted, at this distance of time, to object to the order; but there is a maxim that quod ab initio non valet tractu temporis non convalescet. And as this order was void at the time when it was made, because it does not appear that the justices who removed had any jurisdiction, it cannot have become a valid order by the time that has since elapsed. A general proposition, indeed, that an order of removal unappealed against, is conclusive on the parish to which the removal is made, cannot be shaken; but it must be understood as part of that proposition, that the order is not a nullity, but was made by two justices having jurisdiction to make it. The Rex v. Stepney (Burr. S. C. 23,) is, I think, decisive of the present." Lawrence, J., expressing some doubt on the subject, the case was not then finally decided; but afterwards Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "that after considering the cases cited, and upon the authority of Rex v. Stepney, and Rex v. Bedwin, we are of opinion that the former order was a nullity; and though it was not appealed against, it was not conclusive on the parish of Sow." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hulcott, 6 T. R. 583, though on a different statute, confirms Rex v. Chilverscoton. And see Rex v. Stotford (ante, 858), in which case the order was held to be voidable only on appeal; but the objection did not appear on the face of the order.

Rex v. Llanrhydd, Burr. S. C. 658. Two justices made an order of removal in May, 1768, from Llanrhydd to Ruthin, and the paupers were delivered to the officers of Ruthin, who maintained them for a while; and for some time after they were maintained at the joint expense of both parishes. Notice of appeal being served on the officers of Llanrhydd, on the morning of the sessions, previous to the filing of the appeal, the officers of Llanrhydd consented to take the paupers back to their custody, without giving Ruthin the trouble of appealing. Afterwards, in January, 1769, two other justices removed the same paupers from Llanrhydd to Denbigh.

1. How far it is Final.

Where the justices making the order want jurisdiction, it is a matter of substance, and not of form, and such an order, although not appealed against, is totally void, and cannot be amended.

An order may be deserted and given up by consent, without appealing.

(a) See Rex v. St. Mary, Leicester (ante, 856.)

1. How far it is Final.

The parish in whose favour an order of removal is made, may, by consent, abandon it, without waiting to appeal to sessions: and another order made by them, removing the pauper to a different parish, was held good.

By an order, unappealed against, a pauper is removed from A. to the parish of B., in the county of S. B. at that time consists of two townships, C. and D. (jointly maintaining their own poor,) in the county of S., and one township, (separately maintaining its own poor,) in the county of W. This order is conclusive upon that part of B. which lies in the county of S., semble. After the removal, C. and D., being

And upon appeal, their settlement was found to be at Denbigh. But it appearing that the former order had not been appealed against, the court were of opinion, that the order of removal from Llanrhydd to Denbigh ought to be quashed accordingly. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "That order was made in favour of Llanrhydd; Llanrhydd gave it up, and consented to take the paupers back, without giving Ruthin the trouble of appealing against it. May not a party give up a judgment intended for his own benefit?" The order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Diddlebury, 12 East, 359. By an order, dated August 15th, 1809, M. Davies, single woman with child, was removed from Much Wenlock to Diddlebury. Order confirmed. Case:—Soon after the sessions in July, 1809, two justices, by an order, removed the pauper from Much Wenlock to Long Stanton; she was conveyed by the officers of Much Wenlock, and delivered, with the order, to the officers of Long Stanton, who received her, and maintained her for five weeks. On the 15th of August following a meeting was had between the officers of Much Wenlock and Long Stanton, who, finding the account given by other witnesses was different from that given by the pauper, on whose evidence the order of removal to Long Stanton had been made, and being of opinion that it could not therefore be supported, they mutually agreed to cancel that order, which they did, with the consent of the magistrates who had made it, and who thereupon made another order, which is the order now appealed against, and which was made before any sessions had intervened, to which any appeal against the first order could be made. There was no appeal against the order of removal to Long Stanton. When this case was called on, Le Blanc, J. said, "that the point had been expressly decided in Rex v. Llanrhydd" (ante, 901); and Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "that the point was so clear upon principle, that it did not want any authority to support it." Against the order, Chalbury v. Chipping Farringdon (ante, 900,) was cited; and it was urged shortly, that however an order made might be abandoned before execution, it could not afterwards; and being in the nature of a judgment executed, it could only be reversed by appeal." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "There are two ways of getting rid of an order; one by the consent of the parish in whose favour it is made, to abandon it; the other, by waiting till the time of appeal, and appealing against it to the sessions, by whom it may be quashed if not supported. Here the parish in whose favour it was made, finding, upon further information, that they could not support it, very sensibly determined to abandon it at once by consent, and acted accordingly. And what objection can there be, as Lord Mansfield observed, in the case mentioned, to a party's abandoning a judgment intended for his own benefit? In the case of Salkeld (Chalbury v. Chipping Farringdon), there was no consent of the party in whose favour the order of justices was made to vacate." Per Curiam: Orders confirmed. (See observation of Bayley, in Rex v. Norfolk, ante, 888.)

Rex v. Oldbury, 5 Nev. & Man. 547. Appeal against an order of removal of R. Thompson from West Broomwich to Oldbury. Order confirmed. Case:—The parish of Hales-Owen consists of the borough of Hales-Owen, the township of Oldbury, and ten other divisions situate in Shropshire, and three townships (Lutley, Cradley, and Worley), situate in Worcestershire. The three Worcestershire townships have always supported their poor apart from each other and from the rest of the parish. The township of Oldbury, the borough of Hales-Owen, and the ten divisions above mentioned, which lie in Shropshire, and which form the remaining part of the parish, until the separation of the township of Oldbury from them, as hereafter mentioned, always supported their poor jointly, and the affairs of the Shropshire part of the parish had, until that event took place, been administered by the churchwardens and four overseers, appointed respectively for four quarters, (Oldbury being one,) into which that part of the parish was divided. In 1832, this court made absolute a rule for a mandamus to compel the appointment of overseers for the township of Oldbury, pursuant to the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21; since when that township has maintained its own poor distinct and apart from the other parts of the parish. In 1816, the pauper, together with her father and the rest of his family, were removed by an order of justices from Harborne, Staffordshire, to the parish of Hales-Owen, in the county of Salop. Against this order no appeal was made, and no subsequent settlement has been gained by the pauper. The pauper having become chargeable in West Broomwich, (where she resided,) was removed to the township of Oldbury, by an order of 6th January, 1834. Against this order an appeal was entered, and came on for trial at the last Easter sessions for Staffordshire; when the respondents put in the order of removal made in 1816, and unappealed against. The appellants then proposed to prove that the pauper had never gained any settlement in Oldbury, but the respondents contended that the last-mentioned order being unappealed against, was conclusive upon the parish of Hales-Owen, and every part thereof, and that as Oldbury at that time formed part of the parish of Hales-Owen, it was now estopped from contesting the question of the pauper's settlement not being in that township. And the court of quarter sessions being of this opinion, declined to hear the evidence of the appellants, and confirmed the order. The question for the opinion of this court is, whether, under the circumstances above stated, Oldbury was precluded from contesting the question of the pauper's settlement, in an appeal against the present order. Lord Denman, C. J. "I remember that when I first read the case, I thought that the respondents were right in contending that the order of removal was conclusive. But upon more consideration, I think that the township of Oldbury is now estopped. In 1816, a removal was made to the whole parish of Hales-Owen, which then consisted of fifteen divisions; three in Worcestershire, and twelve in Shropshire. There is a good deal of difficulty introduced into the case, in consequence of the mode in which the parish of Hales-Owen is described in the first order of removal. The words 'in the county of Salop,' may be considered as introduced in order to identify the parish. Upon this I entertain much doubt. Supposing, however, the order to have been properly made to the whole parish, it appears to me that the township of Oldbury, which began to maintain its own poor some time after the order had been made, was at liberty to deny that it was estopped from giving evidence to show that the settlement was not gained in that part of the parish of Hales-Owen which constitutes the township of Oldbury. Were it otherwise, a removing parish would be at liberty to select any township in the parish. There is no estoppel, unless the parties are the same. The party in the order of 1816 was the parish. The party now is the township. As the parties removing the pauper thought fit to say that the pauper was settled in the township of Oldbury, they ought to have proved that fact. Rex v. Oakmere is inapplicable, since it relates to a district newly made parochial—not to an immemorial vill. Lord Tenterden says (5 B. & Ald. 778; 1 D. & R. 527, ante, 846), 'This case arises on the act 52 Geo. III. for inclosing the forest of Delamere, and the question is, whether the district newly created into a township under this statute, which before was neither in any parish nor township, is to be considered as if it had formerly been a parish or township with regard to settlement, or only as becoming so from the time of its creation under the act, and as if it had been formerly uninhabited. And we are of opinion that the latter is the true construction and effect of the statute.' It would rather seem, therefore, that if that, instead of being a new district, had been an ancient division which could have maintained its own poor, when it began to have separate overseers, it would have become a separate township as from the earliest time, and would have constituted such a division as a removal might have been made to. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that we must take it that the township is not concluded by any order made on the parish of Hales-Owen." Patteson, J. "I entertain very considerable doubts upon this question. I thought, when the case was mentioned last term, that the township was estopped altogether, and precluded from denying that the pauper was settled in their township. My doubts are not cleared up now; but my lord and my brothers think that the township was not estopped, and I do not feel the doubts so strong as to lead me to say that I entirely differ from the rest of the court.

1. How far it is Final.

required by mandamus, elect separate overseers and maintain their poor separately; the same pauper is afterwards removed from A. to the township of C. C. is not estopped by the former removal.

1. How far it is Final.

The parish seems to have been divided long before the first order of removal was made, and it ought to be taken that the order was made on that part of the parish which lies in Shropshire; and the order being so made, the pauper was continuously settled in that division of the parish, and in the Oldbury part of the division as well as in the other parts. If it had been proved that the settlement had been gained by renting a tenement, not in Oldbury, that would not show that the pauper was not settled in Oldbury as to a third parish. Since the making of that order Oldbury has been separated from the rest of the division of the parish, but I cannot fully understand how, by a district's dividing itself into partitions, any particular portion can get rid of a liability that previously attached to the whole. At the same time there are great inconveniences in deciding the other way, because it would follow that every part would be estopped, as well as Oldbury. I confess I am not fully satisfied, but my doubts are not so strong as to make me differ entirely." Williams, J. "There is certainly the difficulty pointed out by my brother Patteson, that the parish, by their own act, are to get rid of a liability previously fixed upon them by the order of removal. Then, on the other hand, there is this difficulty, that if the pauper is conclusively settled in the whole and every part of the parish, and the parish were subsequently divided into twenty parts, a third parish might choose any one of the parts in which to fix the settlement of the pauper. It therefore comes to this, whether the precise ground on which the sessions have acted can be sustained. They have acted on the ground that this was an estoppel, and on that ground the evidence was refused. I think the township of Oldbury was not estopped. Admitting that the township is as distinct from the parish as Cumberland from Cornwall, I cannot conceive how a decision that the party was settled in the whole parish is any decision that he is settled in the particular district." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. I do not think this is a question of estoppel. The ground on which an order of removal unappealed from or confirmed, is conclusive, is not that it is an estoppel, but that it is an adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction. The ground of my decision is this: the respondents have removed to Oldbury, and are therefore bound to prove a settlement in that township. They put in the order of removal to Hales-Owen. That alone will not do for them. They must therefore make out their case by showing, by parol evidence, that at the time when the order was made Hales-Owen and Oldbury were identical. The sessions prematurely stopped the inquiry. At the same time, I am aware the court may have great difficulty in dealing with the case when it comes before them again. On the present statement I think the sessions have done wrong." Order quashed; the case to be reheard.

2. Of what Facts, &c.

An order of removal of a wife and children is conclusive of the marriage.

2. OF WHAT FACTS IT IS CONCLUSIVE WHEN UNAPPEALED AGAINST.

Rex v. Northfeatherston, 1 Sess. Ca. 154. Order of removal of a man, his wife, and four children, naming them, to Featherston, and no appeal. Afterwards Featherston found out that this woman was not the wife, for that the man was married before to another. And they removed the woman by her maiden name to Horsington, and the four children thither as bastards. Horsington appealed; and the sessions stated that this woman and the four children were the same with those removed by the first order, and quashed the second order. And by the court: "They have slipped their opportunity, and the first order not appealed against is conclusive."

If two be removed as man and wife, it is conclusive of that fact upon the parish removed to, if the order be not appealed against; and after-born children, claiming settlement from the father and Nympsfield v. Woodchester, 2 Stra. 1172. In 1731, a man and his wife were removed from Nympsfield to Woodchester, and no appeal. They afterwards returned to Nympsfield and had there three children, who were now sent from Nympsfield to Woodchester, together with the father. And upon appeal as to the children, evidence was offered that the man had a former wife, and, consequently, the children born at Nympsfield were bastards settled there. The sessions refused to go into this evidence, being of opinion that Woodchester was concluded by the first order, and that it made no difference that the children were born afterwards. The court, on debate, confirmed both orders; for the marriage being established by the first order, the settlement of the children (which is derivative) follows of course, and can no way be impeached, but by entering into the merits of the first order, which hath been acquiesced in. And nothing is more established, than that an order, unappealed from, is conclusive.

In Rex v. Silchester, Burr. S. C. 551, the court were so clear in this as a settled point, that they did not hear counsel on the side of the objection.

Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth, 6 T. R. 615. The pauper (with her three children) was removed as Elizabeth the wife of W. T. from St. Mary, Lambeth, to Huntspill. Order confirmed as to Elizabeth, but quashed as to the children. Case:—The pauper, Elizabeth, in 1784, was removed from Stoke-under-Hampden to Huntspill, with and as the wife of a man, to whom, before that time, she had been married, which order was unappealed from. The appellants offered to give in evidence, that the pauper Elizabeth had been married to W. T. illegally, he then having a former wife, and which wife was still living; the children were born of the pauper Elizabeth during her cohabitation with W. T.; and the court said, "that Rex v. Southowram (infra), and Rex v. Lubbenham (ante, 796), did not affect the authority of Rex v. Woodchester (ante, 904); and in that case it was established, that an order of removal unappealed against is conclusive, not only on the persons removed, but also on all derivative settlements from them."

Rex v. Rudgeley, 8 T. R. 620. Removal of Emanuel Smith and Elizabeth his wife from Acton Trussell to Rudgeley confirmed. Case:—In 1799, Elizabeth Smith was removed by the name and description of Elizabeth Smith, "widow," from St. George, Hanover-Square, to Acton Trussell; and against that order there was no appeal. It was said, that this was not a removal of Emanuel nor of his wife, as the wife of Emanuel, but simply of Elizabeth Smith, widow, and that, therefore, Acton Trussell had no notice of the ground on which the order of removal would be disputed. But Grose, J. said, "That this order was conclusive, as well as in the case of removal of one as wife; for that this description imported, that she was removed to a parish where her husband had gained a settlement, at least it put that question in issue, and therefore it behoved the parish to which the removal was made to inquire how that settlement was gained. This would have been an object of inquiry on an appeal against that order; but as that parish did not then litigate the question, the court were bound, according to all the authorities, to determine that the former order of removal is conclusive, and that not as to her only, but as to the husband likewise." And Lawrence, J. agreed, and also said, "that the description 'widow' raised a presumption that she was removed to the place where her husband was settled." Le Blanc, J. was of the same opinion and said, "that the cases of Rex v. Silchester (supra), and Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth (supra), show that an order of removal unappealed from is conclusive, though the party be removed by a wrong addition; for in both those cases the woman was removed as the wife, though, in fact, she was not the wife; yet it was holden that the parties were precluded by the orders from disputing the settlements again upon subsequent removals. That the result of all the cases seemed to be this; an order of removal, unappealed against, is conclusive; an order of removal of a woman, though not as wife, is conclusive of the settlement of the husband as well as the wife; and the circumstance of the party being removed under a wrong description does not take the case out of the general rule." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Towcester, 4 Doug. 240. If a wife is removed, and the order unappealed against, it is conclusive as to the husband's settlement, although it was not stated in the order that she was his wife.

Rex v. Southowram, 1 T. R. 353. Elizabeth Booth, widow, and her three children, were removed from Sowthowram to Northowram. The sessions stated, that it appeared by the evidence of William Booth (father of Jeremiah, late husband of the pauper,) that the said William and Jeremiah were born and settled at Halifax, but it did not appear that J. had done any act to mother, are also concluded as to the fact of marriage.

So also it is conclusive on all derivative settlements.

Where a pauper was removed by the name of E. S., "widow," and there was no appeal, it was held conclusive, not only as to her settlement, but as to that of her husband's also.

Order, unappealed against, is only conclusive as to those who are mentioned in it, and removed.

2. Of what Facts, &c.

An order of removal of B., as wife of J. S., which was not appealed against, was held conclusive of the question of marriage.

An order of vagrancy is not conclusive.

The order is conclusive as it regards the settlement adjudicated, and consequently of a derivative settlement.

gain a settlement; that on the 6th of April, 1774, William Booth and his wife, but not any of their children, were removed from Halifax to Northowram, who received them and did not appeal. Jeremiah and Elizabeth the pauper were married some years before the removal of William and his wife, and had those three children; and J., from the time of his marriage until his death, lived at H., in a house he rented, independent of his father, and was not removed by, or mentioned in, the order, nor was then any part of his family. By the court: "The order of removal, unappealed from, is conclusive as to the father and mother, but not as to the son, because he is not mentioned in it, and the sessions have expressly found that the son was settled at Halifax." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Binegar, 7 East, 377. Order of removal of Elizabeth Savage, otherwise Walters, by the name of E. S., single woman, from Midsomer Norton to Binegar, affirmed. Case:—In April, 1793, an order stated, "that John Savage, labourer, and Betty his wife, lately came into Kilmersdon, and are become chargeable; and upon the examination of the said Betty, the wife of the said John Savage, it was adjudged that J. S., and B. his wife, were legally settled in Midsomer Norton." Betty was removed from K. to M. N., and no appeal. On the 20th of July, 1799, there was another order, made on the complaint of the parish of Wellow, by which it was adjudged that the place of the lawful settlement of the said E. S. is in M. N. No appeal against this order. At Lady-day, 1803, E. S. hired herself and served a year with J. B. of Binegar. John Savage is still living. After she left this service she returned to M. N., and became chargeable to that parish. In May, 1805, J. S. was committed to the house of correction for having run away and left E. therein, called his wife, so chargeable; after this, he was at the sessions convicted of having so done, and was sentenced. The marriage between J. S. and E., before either of the said orders of removal were made, was a nullity. The question was, whether the respondents were estopped either by the orders of removal, or by the adjudication of J. S. to be a vagrant for running away and leaving his wife, from giving evidence to prove the marriage a nullity. The second order, treating E. S. as a single woman, was laid out of the case. And also the order of vagrancy was considered as an ex parte proceeding, and therefore not conclusive of the fact of marriage. And it was stated, that it did not appear that the parties ordered to be removed were within the jurisdiction of the removing magistrates; it only stated, that the paupers lately came into the parish of K., not that they were then in the parish at the time of the order made. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The order states, and the magistrates adjudge it to be true, that the paupers are likely to become chargeable to the parish, which could not be, if they were not in the parish at the time." Then it was urged, that here was no adjudication of a present settlement, only that the paupers were last legally settled in M. N. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "That it referred to the time of the complaint made, and the court could not intend an intermediate settlement between the hearing of the complaint and the making of the order of removal." And the court considered the first order of removal as good upon the face of it, and conclusive of the question of marriage, which was involved in the judgment of the justices. Orders quashed.

Rex v. Catterall, 6 M. & Sel. 83. Order of removal of W. Waring, his wife and children, from Preston to Catterall, confirmed. Case:—In 1810, George W., father of the pauper, not then emancipated, gained a settlement by renting a tenement in Catterall. In 1814, he was removed by an order from Claughton to Inskip, which order was confirmed, the sessions not being satisfied of the value of the tenement at Catterall. When the order was made, the pauper was emancipated, but had acquired no settlement in his own right. It was insisted, that the order of removal of the father was conclusive as to the son, and that the value of the tenement at Catterall could not then be proved. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I own that it appears to me that in conformity to the rules which are applicable to judgments in other cases, we ought to quash the order of sessions. There is no doubt that the son is privy to the father's settlement; it is not pretended that he had any other at the time of the adjudication of the father's settlement, or that he acquired any subsequently to it. The question now is, whether the son's settlement is to be governed by this adjudication, which, as it is a matter which regards the general municipal regulations of the realm, is of universal obligation and effect, unless fraud be shown. This, then, being a fair bonâ fide adjudication on the subject-matter, is conclusive as to all the world. The pauper either derived a settlement from his father, or he did not. If not, this adjudication could not affect his settlement, but if he did, then is his settlement determined by that which has been pronounced with respect to his father, to which he is privy." Bayley, J. "The difficulty I have felt in coming to this result, arose from the consideration lest we should thereby hold the son to be bound by an act to which he was not a party, and had no opportunity of giving an answer. But this difficulty is removed when it is recollected that this is not the son's appeal, and he might have appealed if he had been prejudiced by his removal. I forbear to give any opinion as to the question, whether it would have been conclusive against the individual if he had appealed." Abbott, J. "It is important that this question should be settled on general principles, rather than upon nice and petty distinctions. Now the general rule is, that an order of removal, confirmed upon appeal, is conclusive as to all other parishes, as it regards the settlement thereby adjudicated: and it is immaterial, as it respects this general rule, whether the child who derives the settlement from his father be named in the order or not. So, I think, it has been adjudged in other cases. As then the adjudication in 1814 decided that the parent's settlement was elsewhere than in Catterall, this was conclusive as to the son's settlement there, unless it could have been shown that the father acquired such settlement after the emancipation of the son." Holroyd, J. referred to Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth (ante, 905), and the opinions of Grose, J. and Le Blanc, J. in Rex v. Rudgeley (ante, 905), and said, "these authorities appear to me to be decisive that the order in question, having been confirmed on appeal, is like a judgment of ouster, conclusive as to all the world, upon the point of the father's settlement, and of those deriving a settlement from him." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Knaptoft, 4 D. & R. 469; 2 B. & C. 883; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 347. Order for the removal of Elizabeth Burdett from Gumley to Knaptoft confirmed. The case is fully stated in the judgment delivered by Bayley, J. "Two questions were raised for our consideration in this case. First, whether the prior order of removal, and the judgment of the court of quarter sessions quashing the same, were admissible in evidence in the present appeal? and second, whether the question put to the pauper's father, and interdicted by the court, ought to have been allowed and answered? The order of removal and the judgment thereon were tendered for the purpose of disproving the pauper's settlement in the respondent parish: the question put to the pauper's father, he having stated that he was examined at the former appeal, was, what facts he had there stated? We who heard this case argued are decidedly of opinion that the prior order of removal and judgment were not, with any explanation, receivable in evidence on the second appeal. The prior order of removal was quashed. That may have been done upon any one of three grounds. Either because the sessions were of opinion that the pauper was emancipated, and had acquired a settlement of his own; or because the respondents were not then in a situation to prove the father's settlement in the appellant parish; or because the appellants were able to prove a settlement of his elsewhere. The case does not inform us on which of these grounds the order was quashed, but it is conceded that it was quashed upon the merits, and not upon any point of form. If we believed that the ground of the judgment was the want of proof of the father's settlement in the appellant parish, and had then thought that the evidence was under those circumstances admissible, we should have sent the case back to the sessions for further explanation on that head; but we are of opinion that under none of the circumstances supposed the evidence was admissible, and therefore we think it better to dispose of the case in its present shape. As a broad and general proposition we may say that the order of removal, confirmed or re-

2. Of what Facts, &c.

The pauper may appeal. Quære, If such order then conclusive?

An order of sessions, made in 1815, quashing an order for the removal of the brother of the pauper to the appellant parish, and parol evidence to show that the ground of the decision of the sessions was that the father of the pauper had not at that time any settlement in the appellant parish, was received: Held, that even if parol evidence was admissible to prove the ground of the decision of the sessions, still that the order of sessions was not evidence that the father of the pauper was not settled in the appellant parish in 1815, because the father's settlement was a matter that arose collaterally on the trial of the first appeal.

versed upon appeal, or acquiesced in without appeal, is receivable in evidence, because it is a judgment of law. But where, and under what circumstances, is it receivable? This inquiry is answered by the rule laid down by De Grey, C. J. in the Duchess of Kingston's case, by which we find that to make the order receivable the parties in the case must be the same, and the point in issue must be the same: these are both indispensable qualifications. If the matter in issue be collateral or incidental, the evidence cannot be received. The language of that learned judge as applicable to the present case is, 'that a judgment directly upon the point is, as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the matter directly in question.' Does this case fall within that rule? Is the matter in question in the second appeal the same as that in the former? Is the judgment offered in evidence in the second directly upon the point which was in issue in the former? We think not. From the very nature and substance of the order of removal, it is merely collateral to the issue raised in the second appeal. By the original order, an individual, not the pauper in this case, was removed; the question to be tried on appeal was, where his settlement was? The judgment decided that his settlement was in a particular parish. That was the point there, and that was the matter in question; but it is not so here. The early case of Harrow v. Ryslip (2 Salk. 524; 3 Salk. 261), will illustrate this position. The case was this: A. comes into Harrow, and being likely to become chargeable, was removed to Ryslip; Ryslip appealed, and upon the appeal, A. was adjudged to be settled at Ryslip; afterwards Ryslip discovered that Hendon was the place of his last legal settlement, and sent him thither; and the question was, whether, after the adjudication upon the appeal, Ryslip was not estopped against all the world to say that Ryslip was not the place of his last legal settlement: et per Holt, C. J. 'Ryslip is estopped to say otherwise: for if Ryslip had not been the very place of his last legal settlement, the justices must have sent him back to Harrow, who were first possessed of him, for that reason, because they were possessed of him, and he did not belong to Ryslip. And now this is in effect the same question again, viz. whether he belongs to Ryslip? which question has been already determined by the justices on the appeal, who have adjudged that he was last settled at Ryslip.' The report goes on to say,—'Afterwards this was moved again, and then Holt and Gould held the adjudication was final as to Ryslip against all persons and places, because the point of his settlement as to Ryslip was tried in the appeal; but as to Harrow, (for he had been formerly removed by them to Hendon, and that order reversed), they were at liberty to send him to any other place, and were not estopped; because the justices on the appeal did not adjudge him to be settled at Harrow, though they adjudged him now to be settled at Ryslip; so that the other point was not tried.' The language of the court in one part of this case applies to the instance where the order of removal is confirmed, and that on the other where it is reversed; and points out the distinction already alluded to between a judgment of confirmation and one of reversal. In the latter instance the sessions do not find where the pauper was settled, and thus the order of removal confirmed or unappealed from is conclusive evidence that the settlement is in the place to which he is removed; reversed, it is conclusive evidence that the settlement is not there; and beyond this point no case with which we are acquainted has ever yet gone. There are undoubtedly cases which show that where the point in issue is decided, all results flowing out of that point are decided also; as for instance that a wife's removal to the place of her husband's settlement, is conclusive to show that that is his place of settlement. But no case has ever gone further than to hold that the point decided is conclusive upon the same point, and therefore receivable in evidence; other points collateral or incidental to the point decided and undetermined by it are excluded from its operation, and cannot be proved by giving the point decided in evidence. It is the same with respect to judgments; they are merely evidence of the point decided. It is admitted that the pauper has no settlement in the parish to which he has been removed unless his father has acquired a settlement there. Then the father's settlement was a question which came in incidentally, but incidentally only, and was not the point decided by the judgment in the first appeal, which consequently was not admissible as evidence in the second. For these reasons we are of opinion that the order of sessions in this case was right, that the sessions properly rejected the evidence tendered, and that the rule for quashing their order must be discharged"

Rex v. Kenilworth, 2 T. R. 598. Thomas Byfield, his wife and children, were removed from Birmingham to Kenilworth. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, on the 10th May, 1765, hired for a year to J. Chatterton, of Birmingham, and that day entered into his service, and continued in the same until 1st of April, 1766, when he was taken up on a charge of bastardy, and married the next day. His master did not make any complaint against him, nor discharge him from his service. On the 3rd of April he was removed from Birmingham to Kenilworth, where he remained until the 7th of April and then returned back to Birmingham into his master's service, who willingly received him again, and he continued in his service till the end of the year, and received his full year's wages. The order of removal was not appealed against. Buller, J. "There is no proposition in the law of settlements more clear than this, that an order of removal unappealed against is conclusive against all the world; and this is so clearly and universally established that it ought never to be impeached. At the same time the rule is, that the order of removal, though unappealed from, does not at all affect a subsequent settlement. After the order of removal unappealed from, the pauper could not legally return to the parish from whence he had been removed: it would have been a crime in him to do so: and if he could not return without committing a crime, he could not be liable to an action by the master for not completing his contract. If the law intervenes and disables a person from completing his contract, it puts an end to the contract. In this case the pauper returned after the order of removal to the parish of B. where he served a month; but that could not gain him a settlement there, for the act subsequent to the order of removal, by which he was to gain a settlement, should be complete in itself." Grose, J. "I doubt whether the party was liable to be removed, but there having been an order of removal unappealed from, it is decisive." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Corsham, 11 East, 388. The pauper was removed from East Moulsey to Corsham; and it was confirmed by the sessions, who stated that on the 9th of April 1807, he had been removed from Charlton to Garsdon, and no appeal had been entered against that order; which removal was subsequent to a settlement he had gained in Corsham." Lord Ellenborough, "If the pauper were settled at Garsdon at the time the former order was made, could not Corsham, as well as all other parishes, have taken advantage of that upon a question of settlement? Now the order of removal submitted to is the most authentic proof of his settlement being there at the time the order was made, and we must intend every thing in support of that settlement so adjudged. It is in effect a statutable certificate, if I may so express myself, that the pauper was then settled at Garsdon. The statute gives him a settlement there; and the fact stated by the sessions of a prior settlement in Corsham is immaterial." Le Blanc, J. "If the former order were not conclusive as to the settlement being in Garsdon at the time, Garsdon would escape the effect of it altogether, for this order would be conclusive upon Corsham, so as to prevent Corsham removing to Garsdon." Order quashed.

8. Effect of Confirming or Quashing Orders of Removal Appealed Against.

Mynton v. Stoney Stratford, 2 Salk. 527. By Holt, C. J. and the court. "If on appeal to the sessions an order be discharged, that judgment binds only between the parties; but when upon an appeal an order is confirmed, that is conclusive to all persons as well as to the parties, for it is an adjudication that this is the place of the party's last legal settlement, which cannot be avoided by the parish against whom it is made."

2. Of what Facts, &c.

An order of removal, unappealed against, is conclusive of the place of settlement up to that time.

This is the general rule.

Neg. Rex v. Wil-loughby, ante, 416.

Even when a question of settlement is raised between two other parishes.

8. Effect of Confirming or Quashing Orders of Removal Appealed against.

Order confirmed upon the appeal is final; but an order discharged binds only the parties.

8. Effect of confirming or quashing Orders of Removal, &c.

Order quashed does not conclude a third parish from the proof that the pauper was then settled in the appellant parish.

An order of removal discharged does not prevent a third parish from showing a settlement in the same parish, at the time of the order discharged.

Rex v. Cirencester, Burr. S. C. 17; 2 Bott, 521. The pauper was removed from Minety to Coln, St. Aldwin's; and on appeal the order was reversed. Afterwards he was removed from Cirencester to Coln St. Aldwin's. The former removal was on complaint of Minety; the latter on complaint of Cirencester: the pauper was sent on both complaints to Coln St. Aldwin's. On appeal against this latter order, the sessions quashed the same, because they thought the first order conclusive. By the Court: "An order confirmed binds all the world; but when discharged, it is binding only between the parties concerned. For the discharge of the order doth not determine where the pauper is settled; but only that he is not sufficiently proved to be settled in the particular parish to which the justices had removed him." And Lord Hardwicke, C. J., said, "He took it to be clearly settled, where an order of removal is confirmed, that it is conclusive to all the world; where it is discharged, that it is conclusive only between the two contending parishes. And this distinction is reasonable; because a third parish may be able to give better evidence than the other could." And this latter order of sessions was quashed.

Rex v. Bentley, Burr. S. C. 425; 2 Bott, 919. The pauper was first removed from Baxterley to Stourbridge; which order, on appeal, was discharged. Then Baxterley removed to Bentley, and Bentley upon appeal offered to give evidence, that the pauper had gained a settlement at Stourbridge subsequent to the settlement which they acknowledged he had gained in Bentley. The sessions refused to hear it, because the settlement set up in Stourbridge was anterior to the first appeal. By Lord Mansfield, C. J., and the court: "An order confirmed concludes all the world. It is a suit instituted and determined by a court having proper jurisdiction between all proper parties, for the parishes and the pauper were the only proper parties. It is establishing one certain fact, which, when ascertained, regards all the world, and is not to be considered in the light of a res inter alios acta. So the finding that such-a-one was the father of such a child, or the fact of a marriage, or that a person is executor, by suit properly instituted in the spiritual court; in all these cases, when the fact is once established by proper judges, and between proper parties, it is a truth which regards the whole world. But an order discharged is only a kind of negative finding that such a settlement is not the last legal settlement. But does this establish the affirmative, namely, what is so? There is all the reason in the world to let in a third parish, not party to the suit, to give what evidence they can; because it would otherwise open a door to much collusion between parishes. The sessions in substance have said no more than this, 'Upon the case made out to us the pauper is not settled at Stourbridge;' but this ought not to conclude the third parish from giving what evidence they can to discharge themselves. And nothing is more common in settlement cases, than for one parish to be able to get at evidence which another parish could not produce." And the orders were quashed.

Little Bitham v. Somerby, 1 Stra. 232. A person is sent by an order to Somerby as the place of his last legal settlement. Somerby appeals, and the order is confirmed. Soon after, without stating that he had gained any new settlement, Somerby sends him to a third place. By the court: "An order of reversal is final only between the two parishes; but if it be confirmed, it is final as to all the world; and, therefore, no new settlement appearing, the order of removal from Somerby must be quashed. See also Harris v. Ryslip in the judgment of Rex v. Knaptoft, (ante, 908.)

St. Michael's, Beddington, v. Kingston Bowsey, 2 Salk. 486. Order reversed on the appeal is conclusive only as to the parish acquitted, but the first parish may remove again to any parish not party to the former removal.

Foston v. Carleton, 1 Str. 567. A person was removed from Foston to Carleton. On appeal, the order is quashed; and at three months' end a new order is made to remove him from Foston to Carleton. But by the Court: "The last order must be quashed. Barrow v. Ingoldsby, E., 11 Anne, was at the distance of nine months, but the court quashed it, because there could be no inconvenience in putting them to show a new settlement."

Order quashed, conclusive only between the parties.

But it is conclusive as between them.

Rex v. Bradenham, Burr. S. C. 394; 2 Bott, 918. Order of removal, dated December 30, 1754, of John Saunders and Sarah his wife, and four children, from Thame to Bradenham. Bradenham appealed to the next (Epiphany) sessions, and the order was discharged. March 28, 1755, a new order was made for removing Sarah, the wife of J. S., and her children, from Thame to Bradenham. Upon appeal, the sessions adjudge the last settlement of Sarah Saunders and her children to be in Bradenham, and confirm the order. On removal of these four orders into the King's Bench, it was argued, that the order of reversal was conclusive between the two parishes, that so there might be an end of things; and that one sessions shall not counteract and control the acts of a former, unless they state specially, which they have not done here. By the Court: "The last orders must be quashed. We must take the appeal, on which the original order is discharged, to be on the merits. The matter has been determined already between these two parishes, and it must be conclusive. But it is said there are cases where there may be a new removal, as supposing there had been one or two years' distance between the two orders of removal, or a sufficient time to gain a new settlement; yet the court will not intend one gained, unless it is stated in the order. (a) And in this case there is no such time."

8. Effect of confirming or quashing Orders of Removal, &c.

Same point.

Rex v. St. Andrew, Holborn, 6 T. R. 613. M. Carter and her illegitimate son were removed from St. Andrew, Holborn, to Northaw. Case:— By an order, dated 24th July, 1794, M. Carter removed to Northaw. On appeal, the order, for want of a proper adjudication of the last legal settlement of the pauper, which was apparent on the face of it, was quashed. On the 25th of January, 1795, the present order was made, whereby M. Carter and her son were again removed from St. Andrew, Holborn, to Northaw. Upon appeal, the sessions were of opinion, that the first warrant and judgment, having been quashed, was binding between the two parishes. The last order quashed. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "That as the first order in this case was quashed for defect of form, which appeared by the minute of the sessions, it was essentially different from the cases cited, where the order was quashed generally, which must be taken to be on the merits. And it is undoubtedly law, that if an order of removal be quashed for form, it does not conclude the parties." Order of sessions quashed.

If quashed on form, not conclusive between the parties.

Rex v. Osgathorpe, 2 Stra. 1256. A person was removed by an order from Diseworth to Osgathorpe, which was quashed. He was by a second order sent from Diseworth to Osgathorpe as a certificated man; and upon an appeal it was stated, that the first removal was before he became chargeable, and the second after he became so; and the sessions were of opinion, that the first determination was not final, and therefore confirmed the second order. It was moved to quash these two last orders, because a reversal is final between the parties. But by the court: "So it would be, if the special matter did not appear; a certificated person cannot be sent back until he is actually a charge; a removal before is premature. The consequence of which only is, that he must be suffered to remain till he doth become chargeable, but not to make a premature removal final for ever. The last orders must be confirmed."

But special matter may be set forth by the sessions upon the second appeal, which may prevent the first order from being final.

Rex v. Wheelock, 5 B. & C. 511. This was an application for a mandamus to direct the sessions to make a special entry that an order had been quashed for want of proof of chargeability, which, though the fact, the sessions had refused to do. A rule nisi was refused, Bayley, J., saying, "The respondents are not, at all events, concluded by the judgment of the sessions, Appellant may show by evidence the ground upon which the former order was quashed.

(a) The accuracy of this decision may well be doubted. Unless there is some defect on the face of the order, how can the Court of King's Bench quash it, unless the sessions state their reasons specially? Besides, every intendment will be made to support an order. In this case, the pauper might have acquired a settlement in Bradenham by forty days' residence on his estate between the 30th Dec. 1754, and 28th March, 1775, or he might have perfected a settlement inchoate only where the first order was made, as in Rex v. Willoughby (ante, 416.)

8. Effect of confirming or quashing Orders of Removal, &c.

Where an order of removal from A. to B. had been quashed at sessions, and another similar order had been afterwards made: Held, that it was competent on appeal from the removing parish to show that the first order was quashed on account of the pauper being at that time irremovable, but that he was so no longer.

but may, in the trial of another appeal against another order of removal of the same party, explain by evidence to the sessions the particular ground on which the former order of removal was quashed." Holroyd, J., concurred.

Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, 2 Nev. & M. 289; 5 B. & Ad. 526. Appeal against an order of removal of Elizabeth the wife of Isaac Harle (who had lately left the parish of Banwell) and the children of the said Isaac Harle, and Elizabeth his wife, from Banwell to Wick St. Lawrence. Order confirmed. Case:—It was proved that the paupers were in 1822 removed by an order from the respondent to the appellant parish; against which order there was an appeal to the Easter sessions in that year; and that the respondents having discovered before those sessions that the paupers were irremovable, by reason of their residing on a tenement purchased by the pauper Isaac for less than 30*l.*, determined to abandon their order of removal; that the reason was communicated by the then attorney of the respondents to the then attorney of the appellants, but no mention of the same was made to the court, and at the said sessions an order was made by the consent of all parties for quashing the said order of removal, in which order of sessions no mention was made of the ground on which the same was quashed. The court (on hearing of the present appeal), thinking themselves bound to admit the evidence above stated, overruled an objection to it made by the counsel for the appellants; and upon proof that the pauper Isaac did, before the order of removal now appealed against, sell the tenement which rendered him irremovable, and that he had before 1822 obtained a legal settlement in the appellant parish, the court confirmed the last order of removal. If the Court of King's Bench should think that the court of quarter sessions improperly admitted such evidence, and that the order of sessions in 1822 was, as between the present parties, conclusive of the pauper's settlement at that time, the order now appealed against was to be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J. "The only question submitted to us by the court of quarter sessions is, whether the parol evidence was properly admitted. The justices have drawn their conclusion from the facts proved; and I think it sufficiently appeared that the consent was given in consequence of its having been discovered that the pauper was irremovable. The question as to the admissibility of the parol evidence depends on the nature of the point actually decided by the court of quarter sessions when they quashed the first order of removal; for judgments of courts of competent jurisdiction directly on the point are, as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another suit. Upon this principle a judgment at the quarter sessions confirming an order of removal is conclusive not only against the parish to which the removal is directed to be made, but (being a judgment in rem) against all the world, that the pauper, at the time when that order was made, was settled in the parish to which he was sent; for that is the point which the sessions must have decided when they confirmed the order of removal. An order of sessions, quashing an order of removal, is also conclusive between the contending parishes as to the point decided by it. Then the question is, what that point really is. It is that the parish to which the removal was directed to be made was not bound to receive the pauper. The court may have come to that decision, either on the ground that the pauper was not settled in the parish to which he was sent; or that he was not chargeable, or was irremovable when the order was made. That being the effect of an order of sessions quashing an order of removal, it seems to follow that if it be offered as evidence to prove that the pauper was not settled in the appellant parish, it may be shown by parol evidence that the judgment proceeded upon some other ground. It is said that the sessions ought to have made a special entry of the ground on which they quashed the order of removal, and there being no such entry, it must be presumed that they decided on the merits; but in Osgathorpe v. Discworth (2 Str. 1256; Burr. S. C. 261; ante, 911), there was no such entry on the face of the order, and therefore parol evidence must have been given on the trial of the second appeal to show that the pauper was a certificated man when the first order of removal was made, and consequently not chargeable. That is an authority expressly in point; and in Rex v. Wheelock (5 B. & C. 511, ante, 911,) Bayley and Holroyd, Js. refused to compel the sessions by mandamus to make a special entry of the cause for which they had quashed an order of removal; and that on the ground that the party had his remedy by giving, on the trial of a second appeal, parol evidence of the distinct ground on which the order of removal was quashed. It is said that admitting parol evidence to explain such an order of sessions will be inconvenient; but supposing the inconvenience were greater than any I can see in the case, injustice is the greatest of inconveniences, and when an order of removal has been discharged, not on the merits but on other grounds, it would be great injustice if it could be set up as a decision on the merits by a party who knew that they had not been enquired into." Parke, J. "The only question referred to us by the sessions, is, whether they were right in receiving the parol evidence. It is not for us to enquire whether they came to a right conclusion on that evidence, though I have no doubt they did; but the only question now is as to the admissibility of the parol evidence, and I think it would lead to much injustice if it were inadmissible. There are two rules applicable to this subject; one is, that an order of sessions confirming an order of removal is conclusive against all the world; the other is, that an order of sessions quashing an order of removal is conclusive between the contending parishes; but it is conclusive only as to the point which it decides, i. e. that at the time when the order of removal was made, the appellant parish was not bound to receive the pauper. It is like an acquittal upon an indictment for not repairing a road, on a plea of not guilty, where the question of liability has not been raised on the record; such acquittal is no evidence that the parish was not liable, because it may have proceeded on a different ground, viz. either that the road was not out of repair, or was not a public highway. So an order of sessions, quashing an order of removal, may have proceeded either on the ground that the pauper was not settled in the appellant parish, or that he was not chargeable, or that he was irremovable. By analogy, therefore, such an order of sessions cannot be conclusive evidence that the pauper was not settled in the appellant parish. I think it would have been better if the court had held, that it was no evidence at all to prove any of the facts on which the decision may have proceeded, because it does not distinctly show upon the face of it on what ground it did proceed. The cases, however, show that it is prima facie evidence that the pauper was not settled in the appellant parish; but it must be competent for the respondents to show by parol evidence that the order of sessions was not made on that particular ground, for otherwise they would be subjected to great injustice. In some of the cases the special ground for quashing the order of removal has appeared on the face of the order of sessions; in others it has not. In Osgathorpe v. Diseworth the special ground was not stated on the face of the order of sessions. Rex v. Wheelock is a direct authority in favour of our present decision. There the order of removal was quashed in fact for want of proof of the chargeability of the person removed; but that ground was not stated on the face of the order of sessions, and this court refused a mandamus to compel the sessions to state that ground specially in their order, because the respondents might, on the trial of a second appeal, explain by evidence the particular ground on which the former order was quashed. Undoubtedly parties must have a right, either to have the ground stated on the order, or to prove it afterwards by parol evidence. As to Munger-hunger v. Warden (6 T. R. 614), I doubt whether that is any authority at all; it does not appear to have been decided on the question of settlement. It is a general rule, that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is never final between the parties, except as to the point on which the court has adjudicated. Now here, the point adjudicated was merely that, at the time when the order of removal was made, the appellant parish was not bound to receive the pauper: and parol evidence was admissible to show that that was the matter really adjudged." Taunton, C. J. "I certainly had a strong impression in the first instance, that the decision of the sessions in this case was wrong. In the course of the argument, Mr. Erle has removed the difficulties I entertained. I think this falls directly within the authority of one case cited, and that it is also within the scope of another. I would be the last person to disturb the general rule laid down, that an order of sessions quashing an order of removal is conclusive between the contending parishes, and that an order of sessions confirming such an order is conclusive against all the world. But then, an order of sessions must operate with reference to the state of things existing at the time when it was made. Parol evidence, therefore, was admissible here to show the state of things when the first order was made, and explain to what extent it was intended to operate. The argument is, that if the parol evidence be admissible, it appears thereby that the ground for quashing the first order of removal was altogether temporary, inasmuch as the pauper then resided on a tenement which, being his own property, rendered him irremovable, but which was not of a sufficient value to give him a settlement: and, therefore, that the order of removal could not then be supported, it being premature: but that after 1822, a new state of things arose: the pauper sold his tenement, and was no longer irremovable: the right to remove him, which was only suspended, revived, and the sessions, in 1832, might take the new state of things into consideration. I think that view of the case correct. I rely chiefly on the case of Osgathorpe v. Diseworth; I do not place so much dependence on Rex v. Wheelock, because there the point now before the court arose incidentally and not directly. But I cannot distinguish this case from Osgathorpe v. Diseworth. There the pauper, who was a certificated person, was removed before he became chargeable, and a second order of removal having been made, upon appeal, the above facts appeared by evidence, (which must have been given to explain the first order of sessions,) and the sessions thought the first determination was not final between the parties, and made their order accordingly. On motion to quash the last two orders, on the ground that a reversal is final between the parties, the court said: 'So it would be if the special matter did not appear: a certificated person cannot be sent back until he is actually a charge: a removal before is premature: the consequence of which only is, that he must be suffered to remain till he does become chargeable, but not to make a premature removal final for ever. The last orders must be confirmed.' So in this case, as long as the pauper resided in the parish on his own property, he was irremovable; but as soon as the property ceased to be his, he became removable. If a different rule were to prevail here, the consequence would be to make a premature removal decisive. I think the evidence was properly received, and that this case is not distinguishable from Osgathorpe v. Diseworth." Patteson, J. "I think we must assume that the sessions were satisfied that the first order of sessions was made on the ground of the pauper having been irremovable. If they were not so satisfied, they would not have sent the case here. It is admitted, that if the special ground for quashing the first order of removal had appeared on the face of the order of sessions, it would not have been conclusive. The question then is, whether the parol evidence was properly received. Now on that point I cannot distinguish this case from Osgathorpe v. Diseworth. I think it would be much better if the special ground for quashing an order of removal were always stated on the face of the order of sessions, because it would then be unnecessary to give parol evidence on the trial of the second appeal, which is always attended with great expense: but on the authority of Osgathorpe v. Diseworth, I think parol evidence may be given on appeal against a second order, to explain the ground on which the first was quashed. It appears that in that case the ground for quashing the first order of removal was not stated in the first order of sessions, but that it was stated to the court on the trial of the appeal against the second order of removal. Rex v. Wheelock is not in point, but I am at a loss to see how the court could have refused a mandamus, unless they had been of opinion that upon appeal against another order, parol evidence of the circumstances might be received, for otherwise it is clear that the party must have a right to have the special ground appear on the face of the proceedings, and the court in that case would have interfered to enforce it." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Cottingham, 4 Nev. & M. 215; 2 Ad. & E. 251. Two justices made an order removing Sarah Moor from Cottingham to Patrington. The order adjudged that the legal settlement of the pauper was in Patrington, and it was in all respects regular on the face of it. On appeal the sessions quashed the order. No case was stated. The order of sessions was, that the order "be quashed for informality, and that the respondents, the churchwardens and overseers of Cottingham, do pay to the appellants, the churchwardens and overseers of Patrington, the sum of 30*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* for their costs in prosecuting this appeal." The two orders having been brought up by certiorari, a rule was obtained to show cause why the order of sessions should not be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J. "The court of quarter sessions ought to have absolute dominion as to law and facts which come before them. We can know only what they send to us; they have quashed this order on the ground of informality. What the informality is, we do not know. It is argued, that it must be an informality on the face of the order, I cannot agree to that. Interpreting the meaning of the magistrates according to popular language and in the usual sense of the words, we must understand that they meant to state that the order was not quashed on the merits; and it is reasonable that they should do so, to prevent their order from having an effect in binding parties which it ought not to have. The case of Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence (5 B. & Ad. 526; S. C. 2 Nev. & M. 289; ante, 912,) supplies an instance in which an order was held not to be binding, because the decision was not on the merits. As to the question of costs, the order would certainly be bad if the act had said that costs should be granted only when the decision turned on the merits, but that is not so. The act says, that the justices may award costs to the party for whom the appeal shall be determined. They may justly think a removal vexatious which has been made under circumstances producing what they call an informality. It is not necessary that the determination of the appeal should be on the merits. In Rex v. The Justices of Essex (8 T. R. 583, ante, 885) a question arose as to the power of the sessions to award costs, and it was held that they had no such power, but there the appeal was not entered, and the statute gives the power only where the appeal is 'determined.'" Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion. There are two ways in which the proceedings of a court of quarter sessions may be erroneous. They may be defective on the face of them, or they may be erroneous from facts apparent on a special case. Here there is no special case, but on the face of the order of the court of quarter sessions it appears that the original order was quashed 'for informality.' The only question then is, whether such informality could be an informality only on the face of the original order, certainly none such appears. But notwithstanding this, I think there might be an informality in some part of the proceedings, and such an informality as could come before this court no otherwise than by a special case. But if this court see that there might have existed some circumstance making the original order informal, we must confirm the order of sessions, there being no special case. I do not agree that all the cases put by Mr. Hildyard would be cases of informality, but looking at the order of sessions, and nothing being brought positively before us to show that it is wrong, I think it must be affirmed. It is a wholesome rule, that this court is not to entertain a jurisdiction over extraneous matters coming before the sessions unless they be specially stated. If it were otherwise, if we could go into the merits without a special case, there would be in almost every instance a discussion upon affidavits. As to the question of costs, I fully agree with my lord. The words of the statute are quite strong enough to give the power of awarding costs in the case of an order quashed for informality." Patteson, J. "If the word 'informality' in this order of sessions is to be used in its strict legal sense, the sessions have done wrong in quashing the original order. But if it may be understood as merely used in contra-distinction to the merits of the case, we cannot say what the ground has been upon which the order has been quashed, and we can act only on what we see. As to the costs, I agree that the words of the act do not restrict the power of the justices to cases of decisions upon the settlement." Williams, J. "The

8. Effect of confirming or quashing Orders of Removal, &c.

An order of removal, regular on the face of it, was on appeal quashed by order of sessions "for informality." No case having been stated, and the two orders being brought up by certiorari, this court affirmed the order of sessions.

The court of quarter sessions in the same order awarded costs to the appellant: Held, that they had power to do so under stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 30, s. 3, though the order appeared to be quashed for informality only.

8. Effect of confirming or quashing Orders of Removal, &c.

question is, whether 'informality' means a strict legal informality, or whether the word is used in a more popular sense. I do not see why the more popular sense may not be that which the justices intended, and this is the more probable, as the entries of the courts of quarter sessions are frequently made with great laxity." Order of sessions affirmed.

9. Of Amendments by Sessions.

Enabling statute, 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 2.

5 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 2.

Defects of form to be amended.

IX. Of Amendments by Sessions.

The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 2, declares, that the justices upon the appeal shall do justice between the parties, according to the merits of their cause.

And the 5 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 1, provides, that on all appeals to the sessions against the judgments or orders of any justices of the peace, the justices there shall cause defects of form therein to be rectified, without costs, and after such amendments shall proceed to examine and consider the truths and merits of the cause.

Power is given to the justices to amend defects of form; and this power should be liberally exercised, as they may order the amendment to be made on payment of costs. The legislature evidently intended that whatever did not relate to the "truths and merits of the cause" should be considered matter of "form." This is not the sense however in which that word was interpreted in Rex v. Cottingham (ante, 915) and Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence (ante, 912.)

The omission of a complaint, and of adjudication of chargeability, is not a matter of form that can be amended.

Rex v. Great Bedwin, 2 Sess. Ca. 142; 2 Stra. 1158. Order of removal of a certificated person, in which there was no complaint nor adjudication of chargeability. On appeal the sessions amend the order in these particulars, as matter of form only, and insert such complaint and adjudication. And now the question was, whether these amendments went only to form or substance. By Lee, C. J. "There has been but one case in this court on this act since the making of it, and that was not determined. The present seems to be a very strong case against the power of amending. For there must be a complaint from the overseers, otherwise the justices have no power to remove; and a certificated person must be adjudged to be actually chargeable, otherwise he cannot be removed; and these amendments might be the real merits on which this case depended. And it would be a detrimental construction of the act to take it so largely; and would be giving the sessions an original jurisdiction." And quashed by the whole court.

Nor of the jurisdiction of the justices.

Rex v. Chilverscoton, 8 T. R. 178 (ante, 901.) The two parishes were in different counties, and no county mentioned in the margin. The justices were described as justices of the county aforesaid. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is now too late to discuss one of the points made at the bar, namely, whether or not the sessions could amend in this case, it having been decided in Rex v. Great Bedwin (supra) that the sessions can only amend mere defects or wants of form. I verily believe that if the legislature had been asked what was their intention when they passed statute 5 Geo. II. c. 19, they would have said they meant, that if upon inquiry it appeared that the pauper had been removed to his proper parish, the sessions would have power to correct all defects in the order: but the decision to which I before alluded was made ten years after the passing of the act, and at a time when Lord Chief Justice Lee, who was peculiarly conversant in sessions law, presided here. And though I lament that that decision was made, because it renders the statute of little avail, yet it has been acted upon ever since, and it is important to adhere to determinations respecting settlements."

The true construction, but not observed.

Rex v. Moor Critchell, 2 East, 66 (ante, 856.) Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "That it was to be lamented that the 5 Geo. II. c. 19, which was intended to give the justices in sessions a power of amending orders of removal, which were defective in point in form, had, by the construction which had been put upon it, been rendered a dead letter, as all defects of this sort had been considered to be matters of substance, and not of form."

The sessions may alter the word "parish" to "vill."

Rex v. Amlwch, 4 B. & C. 757; 6 D. & R. 627; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 303. (See ante, 755.) It was part of this case that in April, 1824, overseers were appointed for the parish of Llanerchymedd. The order of removal was directed to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Llanerchymedd. To this it was objected, that Llanerchymedd was not a parish. The court of great sessions directed the order to be amended in this respect, and the appellants denied their right to do so, which forms the first point in this case. If they had that power, the case stands as if the removal had been to the parish or vill of Llanerchymedd. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion, that giving a fair construction to 5 Geo. II. c. 19, the sessions had the power to make this amendment. This order was directed to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, and the fact was, there were no churchwardens of L., and it was not a parish but a vill. The persons for whom the order was intended, received it, for they appealed against it, by the description given to them in the order. Upon the appeal they said that L. was not a parish, but an extra-parochial vill, or in other words they pleaded misnomer; that was a mere matter of form. Rex v. Great Bedwin (ante, 916) is very distinguishable, because in that case there was no complaint, nor any adjudication of chargeability; there were material facts and essential parts of the order, for the justices had no power to remove, unless there was a complaint from the overseers; and a certificated person could not be removed unless he was adjudged to be actually chargeable." Holroyd, J. "It was material in point of substance that the order should be directed to a district, the inhabitants of which were bound by law to maintain their own poor." In this case the sessions also erased the word "churchwardens."

In Rex v. Bingley (ante, 853) the sessions amended the order by substituting the "township" for the "parish."

X. Power of Sessions in Orders of Removal.

1. Of their Judgments upon Orders of Removals.
2. Of Special Cases thereon.
3. Of Costs and Maintenance.

It is important that the sessions should bear in mind, in adjudicating upon orders of removal, that the justices by whom the order is made, and also those who are rated or rateable in either of the contending parishes, or whose interests may be affected by the judgment, have no right to vote upon the determination of an appeal. (Rex v. Yarpole, 4 T. R. 71; Rex v. Gudridge, 5 B. & C. 459, infra.)

Rex v. Gudridge, 5 B. & C. 459; 8 D. & R. 217; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 35. A writ of certiorari issued under these circumstances: Upon an appeal against the accounts of the overseers, the order for allowance was quashed. The respondents applied for a case, but a majority of justices then present refused it. After some of them had left the court, a case was again applied for, and three voted for and two against it. One of the three was a rated inhabitant of the respondent parish, and had not voted on the decision of the appeal. The case was afterwards drawn without the concurrence of the appellant. Abbott, C. J. "We think it the safer course to hold that magistrates should not interfere in cases where they are interested; and that the rule for quashing the certiorari (quia improvide emanavit) must be made absolute." (See Rex v. Justices of Monmouthshire, post, 919, and Rex v. Justices of Leicestershire, post, 919.)

1. OF THEIR JUDGMENT UPON ORDERS OF REMOVAL.

Rex v. Bond, 2 Show. 503; 2 Bott, 922. The court of quarter sessions cannot make an original order of removal.

Rex v. Oswell and Woking, 2 Salk. 472; 2 Bott, 926. The sessions ordered the order of removal from Oswell to Woking to be superseded, and that the person should be removed to "Woking aforesaid." And it seems that the court were of opinion that the sessions could not supersede, though they might repeal an order of removal.

Rex v. Milverton, 2 Bott, 928. The sessions ordered that the order should be quashed, and the party sent to the parish from whence he was removed.

And it was held that they had only power to affirm or quash, but not to make a new order; and also that because an order might be good in part, and bad in part; the first part was confirmed and the latter quashed.

St. Andrew's Holborn v. St. Clement's Danes, 2 Salk. 494; 2 Bott, 929. The sessions made an order, and afterwards, at the same sessions, vacated it. Both orders were returned upon a certiorari; and by Holt, C. J. "You should not have returned the vacated order, but only the latter. There ought not to be two different judgments. The sessions is all one day, and the justices may alter their judgment at any time while it continues; but they cannot rescind the order of a previous sessions." (Rex v. Cuckfield, 2 Bott, 925.)

Rex v. Justices of Westmoreland, 2 Sess. Ca. 193; 2 Bott, 931. Appeal to the sessions, at which only four justices were present, who were equally divided; so no determination was made, nor the appeal adjourned. A mandamus was directed to all the justices of the county in general, to proceed on the appeal. It was returned, that at such a sessions an appeal was lodged, and that four justices only attended, two whereof were interested in the question, and the other two were divided in opinion. It was agreed on all hands that this return was not to be supported. It was objected that the mandamus ought to be quashed, because it doth not appear that the appeal was before them; and that for ought appears, the mandamus requires the justices to do an impossible thing, viz. to proceed on an appeal not before them, since the appeal, being lodged at a former sessions, was not continued over to the subsequent sessions, and therefore was by law gone. On the other side it was said, that it was not usual in such cases to return the continuances; but that if in fact there was no such continuance, the fault was in the justices, who ought to have adjourned the appeal, till, by the coming of more justices, the matter might have been determined. Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "The question is, whether there is a possibility of the justices' proceeding in this appeal?" He thought if there was not, as there would be a failure of justice in this respect, an information ought to go against the justices who were at the sessions.

[Note.—The chief justice advised the proceeding on the appeal, or returning the continuances, and seemed inclined to grant a peremptory mandamus if they did not do so.]

The sessions, being equally divided upon the peal, quashed it:

damus* would not

Rex v. Justices of Monmouthshire, 4 B. & C. 844; 7 D. & R. 334; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 410. Upon an appeal against an order of removal, it appears that the justices were divided in opinion as to the settlement; but thinking that the respondents ought to have proved the forty days' residence, and had not, they determined, without any division, to quash the order. It was urged that whether the decision was right or wrong, the King's Bench ought not to interfere by mandamus; and it was also urged that the decision of the sessions was right; and although it is true that in Nolan's Poor Laws (vol. ii. p. 446,) it is said, "That if the magistrates, who have a right to join in the court's determination, should be equally divided in opinion, no judgment can be given, but the appeal must be adjourned from sessions to sessions, until a majority concur." And in the note, "This seems to be their bounden duty; for otherwise the court will grant a mandamus to compel them to enter continuances and hear the appeal at a subsequent sessions." Bodmin v. Warlingen (2 Bott, 733, 889;) and Rex v. Justices of Westmoreland (2 Bott, 734, supra,) are cited in support of, but do not support these positions. In the former case, the justices neither made any order nor adjourned the appeal: and at the following sessions the order of removal was quashed, and this court quashed that order of session, because it was made without an adjournment. In the other case the justices neither gave judgment nor adjourned, and on an application for a mandamus, though the court entertained an opinion in its favour, nothing was done; but if a mandamus had been granted, that would only show that the court will compel the sessions to proceed to judgment on an appeal which they have begun to hear, and improperly refused to go on with. It was also urged, that this was not like an appeal to the House of Lords, where, if the house be equally divided, the respondent prevails, for the presumption is in favour of the respondents, who have the judgment of the court below. But that an appeal against an order of removal is in reality an original proceeding. Contra, it was argued in Bodmin v. Warlingen. The court said that where the justices were equally divided, that was a sufficient warrant for the clerk of the peace to have entered an adjournment, and it was his duty so to have done. Abbott, C. J. "I think the rule for a mandamus ought to be discharged. It appears, that in this case the sessions have given their judgment. This court is not a court of error from that court; it may compel the sessions to proceed to hear and decide the appeal; but when they have so determined it, this court cannot compel them to correct their judgment, if it appear to be erroneous. It is unnecessary to say whether the judgment pronounced by the sessions is erroneous, because we are of opinion that if it were so we have no authority to compel them to correct it."

1. Of their Judgment upon Orders of Removal.

Rex v. J. Monmouthshire, 8 B. & C. 137; reported as Rex v. Uske, 2 M. & R. 173. Application for a certiorari to bring up an order of removal, and an order of sessions for adjourning the appeal against the said order, that the same might be quashed. It appeared that four justices were present at the appeal. One of them was the removing justice, and rated to the poor of Uske (the respondent parish). He and one other justice voted for the respondents, and the other two for the appellants. The chairman announced that the court was divided. The appellants then moved to quash the order, because the respondents had not made out their case. But the court adjourned the appeal. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "This rule must be discharged; but I wish to have it clearly understood that, in doing so, we do not, in any degree, intend to sanction a magistrates voting in any case in which he is interested. It is contended that, though the justices were divided in point of fact, that in point of law the vote given by the party interested was a nullity, and that the sessions ought to have quashed the order. The late decisions establish, that we cannot assume to ourselves the jurisdiction of a court of error and revise the judgment of the sessions. It is said that the sessions had not jurisdiction to make the adjournment. It is clear that they had jurisdiction to make any order concerning the appeal; and, among others, the order that the hearing should be adjourned. In Rex v. Gudridge (ante, 917) the rule which had been obtained was, not to review the order of the sessions, but to quash the certiorari, quia improvide emanavit. The question before the court was, whether that writ ought to have been allowed to issue to remove an order of sessions, made under circumstances similar to those in this case? And the court thought that the certiorari ought not to have issued. Here a judgment has been pronounced by the sessions, relating to a matter over which the court had jurisdiction; and assuming their judgment to be erroneous, I think we have not jurisdiction, as a court of error, to review it."

By the vote of an interested justice the court were equally divided, and an adjournment was entered. Assuming this to be wrong, K. B. cannot review it.

Rex v. J. Leicestershire, 1 M. & Sel. 442. This was an appeal against an order of two justices, for the removal of William Clifton from Market Harborough to Biddenham, which came on to be heard at the Epiphany sessions, when the chairman pronounced the judgment of the court for confirming the order; but one of the justices who made the order, being present at the hearing of the appeal, inquired of the clerk of the peace, whether he was not one of the justices making the order; and being answered in the affirmative, observed that, it being contrary to a rule of that court, for justices who had made orders of removal to vote on the hearing of any appeal thereon, his vote, in this case, must consequently be withdrawn; and therefore judgment must be for quashing, instead of confirming the order, as by taking away his vote, the majority would be against confirming and for quashing the same. The clerk of the peace thereupon entered the judgment of the court for quashing, without perceiving at the time, that, by withdrawing the vote of the said justice, the votes of the remaining justices would be equal; whereon, by the rules of the court, an adjournment of the appeal should have been entered, instead of a judgment to quash the order. Under these circumstances, a rule nisi was obtained for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances on the said appeal to the next general quarter sessions, and then to hear and determine the same. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If any error was made in the entry of the clerk of the peace, that error should have been pointed out at the sessions while the court was sitting, and competent to reform its own errors, and to draw out a more correct judgment. If no judgment had been pronounced, the court might have interposed; but here there is a judgment. The party who would have corrected the error should have applied to the proper forum, and in due time; and if it had been found that the numbers were equal, nothing would have been done upon it; for it would have been a nullity: but here no step of that sort was taken, but judgment was entered; and this court cannot, in order to supply a remedy, exercise a jurisdiction which does not belong to them." Grose, J. "This court ought not to countenance such an application, inasmuch as the error should have been noticed at the time." Bayley, J. "Except in matters of a criminal nature we cannot look dehors the record. This court cannot sit as upon a scrutiny before an election committee. In Bodmin v. Warlingen (2 Bott, 982), the objection appeared upon the entry of record, made by the clerk of the peace." Rule discharged.

2. OF SPECIAL CASES. (a)

Whenever the sessions entertain a doubt upon the law, as applicable to the facts disclosed upon the hearing of an appeal, they are in the practice of authorizing the party against whom they decide to have their judgment reviewed by the Court of King's Bench. This is called granting a special case. The sessions, however, are not bound to this course whenever they are pressed to adopt it by the counsel for the defeated party, but may exercise their discretion; and where they have no doubt in their own minds, they ought to refuse, in order to save the parties from further expensive litigation. (Rex v. Darley Abbey, 14 East, 285. (b) 597) On the other hand Lord Hardwicke said, "that if the justices will not state the facts specially, though requested to do so, when the matter is doubtful, this is very blameable conduct in them." (See Rex v. Preston-upon-the-Hill, post, 921.)

Special cases substituted in place of statement for judge of assize to determine. (c)

This practice of stating a case for the opinion of the court is a very wholesome substitute of the old mode, by which the facts were specially stated in the order of sessions, and then referred to the judges on the circuit. The appeal for this purpose was adjourned, and then the order of removal either quashed or affirmed, according to the opinion of the judge. Still the order might be removed into the King's Bench; and in Cuerden v. Leyland (ante, 495), was quashed, though the judge on the circuit had given an opinion in favour of it. But in Rex v. Natland (ante, 696), the sessions directed a case to be drawn up for the opinion of the judge of assize, and agreed to be determined by his opinion. The judge heard counsel on both sides, and gave his opinion; and, upon a notice for a certiorari, Lord Mansfield observed, "that it was a manifest consent of the parties to this reference to the judge,

(b) At the Middlesex intermediate sessions, on an appeal by G. Acklam, Esq., appellant, and the trustees of St. Luke's, Chelsea, respondents, on 20th of June, A. D. 1833, after hearing Mr. Bodkin for the trustees and Mr. Clarkson for the appellant, Mr. Broughton, the chairman, (in answer to an application by Mr. Bodkin that a case might be allowed for the consideration and determination of the Court of King's Bench,) said, "it was not usual to grant a case when all the magistrates on the bench were unanimous." Mr. Rotch, the magistrate and M. P., expressed the same opinion, and after some discussion the case was refused.

(c) Special cases from sessions should be always drawn by counsel. (Rex v. Woolpit, 5 Nev. & Man. 526, 538; and see Rex v. Great Wishford, 5 Nev. & Man. 540.)

and therefore it was like all other references, by consent; and after this consent, he thought it very improper to take the matter up again." Where it was agreed that several cases should abide the issue, King's Bench will not interfere. (Rex v. Justices of Worcester, 9 D. & R. 210.)

If the justices will not state the case specially, though it may be blameable conduct in them in some instances, yet there are no means to compel them. In Rex v. Oulton (Burr. S. C. 64), an order of removal, upon appeal, was confirmed generally, without stating any case. The appellants excepted at the sessions to their refusing to state the case specially, and delivered into court a bill of exceptions under their hands, which was read and received by the court. The substance of the exception was, that the children, removed after their father's death, went with their mother to an estate of her own at Burnham Overly, and there inhabited with her upwards of three months. These exceptions were returned up together with the orders. And it was moved to quash the order of sessions together with the order of removal. The court were inclinable to come at this case if they could, as it seemed to be a determination against law. But by Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "To what purpose should we make a rule to show cause why this order of sessions should not be quashed? For I do not see that we can ever make such a rule absolute; because this, that it is alleged to have been the real state of the case, doth not appear to us to be the fact. And how can we take it for granted that it was the real fact? To be sure, it is a thing very much to be censured and discommended, when an inferior jurisdiction endeavours to preclude the parties from an opportunity of applying to a superior. But still we must go according to the due course of law." And Mr. J. Page said, "he never knew an instance that this court could force the justices, against their will, to state a special case."

In Rex v. Great Wishford, 5 Nev. & Man. 540, where, upon a case for the opinion of Court of King's Bench, the sessions state the facts and draw their conclusions, the court will not disturb the finding, unless it appear that the evidence was contrary to the finding, or that there was no evidence to support it.

Rex v. Preston-upon-the-Hill, Burr. S. C. 77. Order for removal from Daresbury to Preston upon appeal confirmed generally; not caring to state any special case in their order. A motion was made to quash these orders, which came before the court upon a bill of exceptions containing a special state of the case. On showing cause, the single question was, whether a bill of exceptions would lie in this case to a court of quarter sessions? By Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "This is a case of great consequence, and there may be very great inconveniences on either side. It hath been much wished, that a bill of exceptions would lie to the justices at their sessions; because otherwise it may sometimes happen, that they may determine in an arbitrary manner contrary to the resolutions of the courts of law. For if the justices will not state the facts specially (though requested to do so) when the matter is doubtful, this is a very blameable conduct in them, and it is to be wished that it might be avoided. On the other hand, there may be very great inconveniences arising from the abuse of bills of exceptions. And this matter of the settlement of the poor, which ought to be rendered cheap and speedy, may, by such means, be rendered dilatory, expensive, and burthensome." And after a full hearing of the arguments on both sides, the court were unanimously of opinion, that a bill of exceptions doth not lie to the quarter sessions.

It was moved to set aside an order of sessions confirming an order upon appeal. But the court would hear nothing of the merits of the cause, the order of sessions being in that case final, unless there had been error in form. (1 Vent. 310.)

South Cadbury v. Braddon, 2 Salk. 607; 2 Bott. 751. On appeal to the sessions, the court discharged the first order. It was moved to set aside the order of discharge, because the justices do not say whether they discharge it for form, or on the merits. But by the court: "The justices are not bound to express the reason of their judgment, any more than other courts; but the reason of their judgment must be collected from the record, as where judgment is arrested upon an insufficient indictment.

If the sessions reverse the first order, and that, being removed, appears to be good, this court must intend it was reversed on the merits, and affirm the order of sessions. So also if the order is reversed specially for want of form, and no defect of form appears on the face of it, the court will infer that it was quashed for some extrinsic informality.

If the sessions reverse the first order, and that, being removed, appears not to be good, we must intend it was reversed for form, and affirm the order of reversal.

So, if the sessions affirm the first order, and that appears to be good, we must affirm the order of sessions.

But if the first order appears bad, and the sessions affirm it, this court must reverse it, because it appears naught.

The justices should find the facts, and not merely state the evidence from which the facts are to be drawn.

In stating a case it is the duty of the justices to find the facts, and not to state the mere evidence of the facts and leave the court of King's Bench to draw the inference which the justices below ought to do. (Rex v. Lyth, ante, 349; Rex v. Bottesford, ante, 428). Sometimes the facts are stated without noticing the points for consideration. (Rex v. Harbury, 1 B. & Ad. 360.) This however is very inconvenient. The points for argument should be distinctly stated. But where the sessions stated that it appeared to them that the pauper was bound, the King's Bench thought this sufficient, as "it is not necessary that the evidence should appear to us." (Rex v. E. Knoyle, 2 Bott, 644.) If a particular term has acquired a local meaning, the sessions must state the sense in which the word is used, for without such explanation, the King's Bench will understand it in its ordinary meaning; and in this case the order of sessions was quashed, (Rex v. Thornham, ante, 600). Where it was insisted that the term, "Landsell Colliery," imported an interest in land, Willes, J., said, "We cannot take notice of the meaning attributed to the term, and said to be so understood in the North by the trade unless it were so stated to us." (Rex v. N. Bedburn, Cald. 452.) The justices are also the proper judges of fraud, and must find it as a fact; (4 Nev. & M. 355; Rex v. Tellingham, 1 B. & Ad. 180); although it may be a question for the King's Bench, whether the fraud so found, prevents the pauper from gaining a settlement? (See Rex v. Birmingham, ante, 840, see also Rex v. Tedford, ante, 729. Rex v. Kibworth Harcourt, ante, 653.) Where the sessions draw a conclusion, and state the facts specially, the Court of King's Bench will not, although they do not concur in the inference drawn, disturb the decision if there are any premises to warrant it. The court has not however adhered to this rule, and in many instances have reversed the judgment. (Rex v. Rickingall Superior, 1 Nev. & M. 47; Rex v. Clarby, 1 Nev. & M. 118; Rex v. Nether Knutsford, 1 B. & Ad. 726; Rex v. Norton Bavant.) And it has been observed in some recent cases that the court must presume that where the facts are specially stated by the sessions, that the justices wish to know if their inference is correct. (Rex v. St. Andrew, Cambridge; Rex v. Rosliston; Rex v. St. Martin, Leicester.) "If upon a case stating evidence only the court of King's Bench should think the conclusion drawn by the sessions wrong, they would probably deem it better to send it back for revision; but where the conclusion appears to be right, it would be useless to send it down again." (Abbott, J. Rex v. Great Yarmouth, ante, 839). So, also, the order of sessions will be confirmed, when the ultimate decision, although founded on wrong grounds, was correct. (Rex v. Skeffington, ante, 579). When the case is insufficiently stated, the King's Bench frequently send it back to be reheard. (1 B. & Ad. 362.) But it was agreed in Rex v. Wykes, (ante, 862) that it could not be done without consent; and the counsel against the order of sessions refusing to consent, the order of sessions was quashed. Where the sessions were of opinion that an indenture was void, and the King's Bench thought otherwise; "as the merits of the case had not been gone into at the sessions,' the case was sent down to be re-stated. (Rex v. Winwick. (a) 2. Of Special Cases.

When the sessions improperly rejected evidence of the contract of hiring, and a case was granted upon the admissibility of the evidence, the case was sent back to the sessions to be reheard. (Rex v. Wrangle, 2 Adol. & El. 13; 4 Nev. & M. 375.) If the case is signed by the chairman, strong evidence is required to show a mistake in any part. (5 B. & Ad. 883.)

Rex v. Bray, Burr. S. C. 682; 2 Bott, 993. The sessions stated the evidence only, and not the fact of hiring. (b) It was sent back to be re-stated: and the majority of the justices there refused to re-examine the pauper, or to hear any further evidence; although three of the justices then on the bench had not been present at the appeal. It was moved to send it again to the sessions, to be a second time restated. Rex v. Page, M., 1764, was cited, where the question was, whether a man was occupier of tithes, or only bailiff? The sessions was ordered to hear further evidence; and did so, and cited Rex v. Hitcham, H., 33 Geo. II., where the sessions did re-examine the fact, whether the pauper was a single or a married man, when hired? Unto this it was answered, that in both of these cases it was necessary to hear the evidence again: in the present case it was not necessary; the matter was fully examined into before; the sessions had stated the evidence, without drawing the conclusion; the court thought the sessions ought to have drawn the conclusion, and sent it back to them for that purpose only. They have now done so. They have stated a hiring for a year. And this court have now received all the information they wanted. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Whether the justices, at the second sessions, were or were not obliged to hear new evidence, is a question that must depend upon the nature of the case. In Page's case new evidence was necessary. But in the present case it was sent back only to cure an informality. Here the pauper had before given a full account of the agreement. Therefore the justices at the second sessions did very right in not examining him over again."

Case sent back to cure an informality. It is not necessary to hear fresh evidence. But see subsequent cases.

In Rex v. Bromley, 6 T. R. 330, which was an order for the removal of Sarah, widow of J. Ward, the respondents proved the settlement of J. Ward in the appellant parish, and then cohabitation with the pauper as his wife. The appellants then called Sarah, to prove that they were never married, and the court refused to hear her. Lord Kenyon said, "The evidence was admissible, but the sessions must judge of the effect of it." It was then proposed that on the rehearing the sessions should be confined to the examination of Sarah and of witnesses to that particular point, without putting the respondents to the expense of proving their case again. Lord Kenyon, "The whole case must be gone into again at the sessions. I remember a case some years ago when the same objection was made, and Lord Mansfield said, that it was like granting a new trial, in which case the whole case must be proved."

The whole case must be reheard when it is sent back to the sessions.

Rex v. Bloxam, 3 Nev. & M. 385; 1 Ad. & E. 386. At the Warwickshire January sessions, 1832, James Smith having been convicted by Dr. Bloxam of being an idle and disorderly person, in refusing to support his wife and child, whereby they became chargeable to the parish of Rugby, appealed against the conviction, which was quashed by the sessions subject to a case. Dr. Bloxam thereupon obtained a certiorari to remove such case and the orders and proceedings of the sessions in the Court of K. B., and the usual recognizances were entered into for prosecuting the certiorari. On the hearing in K. B., the case was sent back to the sessions to be restated. At the July sessions, 1833, the appeal was reheard, and the court then confirmed the conviction, subject to a case reserved to the appellant. In Michaelmas term, 1833, a rule of

A case sent back to the sessions to be restated must be reheard, and the sessions may receive further evidence and make a new order on such rehearing. The certiorari by which the original order was removed does not operate to remove the subsequent one. The party wishing to contest such order must obtain a certiorari and remove it. A certiorari cannot be applied for after the expiration of six calendar months from the making of the order, &c., to be removed whatever may have been the cause of delay.

K. B. was obtained calling on the prosecutor of the appeal to show cause why the recognizances of the defendant (Dr. Bloxam) and his bail should not be discharged, and why all further proceedings on the certiorari and the restated order of sessions returned therewith, should not be stayed until the prosecutor's attorney should undertake to pay the defendant or his attorney his costs if the last decision of the sessions should be affirmed. It was stated on affidavit, in answer to this application, that the ground on which the case was before sent back to the sessions, was their omission to state certain facts; that they had now specially found those and other facts, but that such their special finding was inconsistent with the determination they had come to in favour of the conviction; that at a subsequent session (October, 1833,) the appellant had moved that the case should be restated, and the proceedings returned to K. B. under the original certiorari, and an order had been made by the justices accordingly. A rule was thereupon granted by K. B. enlarging the rule for discharging the recognizances, until the judgment of that court should be given upon the restated case and order of sessions, in the matter of the above-mentioned conviction. In Hilary term, 1834, a rule was obtained calling on the prosecutor of the appeal to show cause why the rule last above-mentioned should not be discharged, and why the certiorari should not be quashed, and a procedendo awarded to carry back the record of conviction to the sessions. The affidavit in support of this rule professed to explain the finding and judgment of the sessions complained of by the appellant; and it stated that, although the sessions had made an order for restating the case and returning the proceedings to K. B., no case had ever been prepared or brought up on behalf of the appellant under the existing writ of certiorari, nor had he applied for any new certiorari for that purpose, and that six months had elapsed since the reservation of a case at the July sessions; it was therefore suggested that the prosecutor was now disabled from further carrying up such restated case or proceedings to K. B., under the present or any other certiorari, that the conviction must remain in force, and that the object of the respondent in suing out the certiorari and giving the recognizances having thus been effected, the recognizances ought to be discharged. In an affidavit on the other side, it was represented that the delay in preparing the case had been occasioned by the defendant's refusal to settle one. Lord Denman, C. J. "By 13 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 5, a certiorari must be applied for within six months next after the conviction, order, or other proceeding to be removed: and according to the authorities cited in 1 Chitty's Statutes, tit. Certiorari, p. 133, note c, the time is to be reckoned without regard to delays in drawing up the case, or from any such cause; and if this were not so held, the statute would in effect be repealed. It follows from the express words of the act, that the court has no power of extending indulgence to a party who from whatever cause is behind the proper time. Then however it is said that the original certiorari is still in force. The question therefore is, whether when a party has obtained a certiorari to remove a judgment given against him, and the case has been sent back to the sessions, which implies a power given to them of rehearing the whole, he is afterwards bound, upon the sessions reversing their former judgment, to bring up proceedings which are then in his favour: or whether the certiorari, when originally issued, had the effect of removing those proceedings which had not then taken place? and I think this cannot be maintained. As to the question, who should remove the ultimate proceeding of the sessions, it is often unnecessary to raise it, because if the second hearing convinces the justices that their former decision was right, the judgment is the same, and no such difficulty can arise. But where an opposite decision is come to, he who complains of it is the party to bring up the case. The appellant ought to have done so in the present instance, but he is out of time. The proper course will be to discharge all the rules, the case will then stand as if there had been no appeal." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. The party who originally removed the proceedings has nothing to do with removing them now. They have changed sides." Patterson, J. "I do not acknowledge the distinction between restating and rehearing. How is it possible for the sessions to restate the case without hearing it again? The bench may not consist of the same persons. If the certiorari were considered as operating upon the last order of sessions there would be this absurdity, that the party who sued it out would be liable under his recognizance to pay costs, unless he got a judgment set aside which was in his own favour." Williams, J. concurred. The court made the rule absolute for discharging the recognizances, but with this exception discharged all the rules.

After the determination of an appeal at the sessions, if the order is reversed, and the paupers will not, or are not able to return of themselves, to the place from whence they were improperly removed, it seemeth that the place where they are cannot lawfully be rid of them but by another order of the justices, setting forth the matter specially. In Honiton v. South Beverton (Comb. 401; 2 Bott, 909), two justices remove a man from Honiton, Devon, to South Beverton, Somerset. They appeal to the sessions in Devon, where the order is reversed. Now two justices of Somerset may by order remove him to Honiton again; for it is but an execution of the order of sessions, which could not otherwise be done, because it is out of the jurisdiction of the court of sessions.

A special case granted by the sessions is removed by certiorari, and therefore if that writ be taken away by statute, local or otherwise, no case can be brought up to the superior court. (See Certiorari.)

Rex v. Justices of Sussex, 1 M. & Sel. 631. A rule was obtained for a certiorari to remove an order, in an appeal between Billingham and Slinfold. The affidavits stated that the appeal had been heard at the Michaelmas sessions, when the order was confirmed, subject to the opinion of K. B. on a case to be stated. A case had been drawn by counsel for Billingham in November, which was not approved of by the solicitor for Slinfold; but, although frequent applications were made to him, he would not state his objections. The case was afterwards settled by the court at the Epiphany sessions, and a copy sent to the solicitor for the respondents; and he was again applied to to have the case set down for argument: this request he refused to comply with; but at the same time gave the solicitors for the appellants to understand, that they need be under no apprehension, as he would consent to a certiorari issuing without regarding whether the six months had expired or not. Under the impression that the certiorari would be consented to, the usual notice to the justices, as required by 13 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 5, had not been given. It was contended, that the statute was only intended to enable justices to show cause against the granting such certiorari, and did not apply to this case, where the justices themselves had settled the case, and thereby expressed their desire to have it brought up; and cited Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Battams (1 East, 298.) Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The order of removal was in the first instance a summary proceeding, and the order of sessions thereupon was a revision of that which was originally a summary proceeding. I find nothing in the language of Lord Kenyon on which an argument has been raised to the contrary: it is not applicable to the present case. Admitting that the magistrates may have wished, at the time when they settled the case, to have brought it up; still there may be reasons why they might think fit to show cause, and, unless it can be shown that it could serve no possible end to give them six days' notice, we cannot so presume. The statute appears to me imperative." Bayley, J. "was not aware of any instance where a certiorari had been granted, after the expiration of the six months, upon a case reserved, and that it was the settled practice to give the six days' notice." Rule discharged. The application was renewed in the same term (1 M. & S. 734), the six days' notice having been given to the justices. It was urged, that the above circumstances took it out of the general rule. Rex v. Winpenny (34 Geo. I.) was cited, where a similar application, for removing an order for the maintenance of a bastard child, was made after the six months, and allowed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The statute expressly requires that the certiorari shall be applied for within six calendar months after order made; and I think it will be attended with beneficial

What is to be done with the pauper when the order of removal is quashed.

If no certiorari then no case.

A certiorari to remove an order of sessions, confirming an order of removal by two justices, must be moved for within six calendar months after such order of sessions made, and six days' notice of such motion must be given to the justices, pursuant to 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, notwithstanding the order of sessions was made subject to the opinion of the Court of K. B. on a case to be stated, which was afterwards stated and settled by the justices at sessions.

consequences, if we put a strict interpretation upon this clause, as it will have a tendency to accelerate the settling of the cases which are intended to be brought up for our revision." Bayley, J. "In strictness, the case ought to have been settled at the Michaelmas sessions sedente Curia." Rule refused.

When a case is granted, the unsuccessful party sues out a certiorari, which is obtained upon the signature of counsel, though it appears by Rex v. Sawbridgeworth (1 Barnard. 297), that formerly there was a motion made for a rule nisi in court, and in that case the court "denied the motion, without so much as making a rule to show cause." The case is then set down for argument in the crown paper. If the court of quarter sessions refuse to grant a case the orders cannot be set aside for any defect not apparent on the face of them; for the Court of King's Bench will not take cognizance of the facts on affidavit. (See Rex v. James, p. 252.)

Justices on appeal to them concerning the settlement of any poor person, to award costs.

By 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 3, (a) "For the more effectual preventing of vexatious removals and frivolous appeals, it is enacted, That the justices of the peace of any county or riding, in their general or quarter sessions of the peace, upon any appeal before them there to be had, for and concerning the settlement of any poor person, or upon any proof before them there to be made, of notice of any such appeal to have been given by the proper officer to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish or place (though they did not afterwards prosecute such appeal) shall, at the same quarter sessions, award and order to the party from whom and in whose behalf such appeal shall be determined, or to whom such notice did appear to have been given, as aforesaid, such costs (b) and charges in the law, as by the said justices in their discretion shall be thought most reasonable and just, to be paid by the churchwardens, overseers of the poor, or any other person, against whom such appeal shall be determined, or by the person that did give such notice as aforesaid; and if the person ordered to pay such costs shall happen to live in any county, riding, city, or town corporate, or elsewhere, out of the jurisdiction of the said court, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, riding, city, liberty, or town corporate, wherein such person shall inhabit, and every such justice is hereby required, upon request to him for that purpose to be made, and a true copy of the order for the payment of such costs produced, and proved by some credible witness upon oath, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the money mentioned in that order to be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the person that is ordered and ought to pay the same; and if no such distress can or may be had, to commit such person to the common gaol of that county or liberty, there to remain by the space of twenty days."

Also of frivolous grounds of appeal.

By the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 82, the court of sessions may order the parish against whom the appeal shall be decided to pay just and reasonable costs, and the court is to certify the amount; and by the 83d section, if any of the grounds of appeal are frivolous and vexatious, the court may award the costs of disputing such grounds. These costs, as well as the maintenance, are recoverable in the same manner as the penalties under the statute. (See the sections in the Appendix.)

Of Maintenance.

The parish to which the pauper shall belong shall pay the relief and maintenance of the pauper from the time of receiving notice of the chargeability. Section 84.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 9, "For the preventing of vexatious removals, if the justices of the peace shall, at their quarter sessions, upon an appeal before them there had, concerning the settlement of any poor person, determine in favour of the appellant, that such poor person or persons was or were unduly removed, that then the said justice shall, at the same quarter sessions, order and award to such appellant so much money as shall appear to the said justices to have been reasonably paid by the parish, or other place, on whose behalf such appeal was made, for, or towards the relief of such poor person or persons, between the time of such undue removal, and the determination of such appeal; the said money so awarded to be recovered in the same manner as costs and charges upon an appeal are prescribed to be recovered by the said statute made in the ninth year of his late majesty King William the Third, intituled (c. 30.) 'An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the relief of the Poor of this Kingdom.'"

Rex v. J. Nottingham, 1 Sess. Ca. 422; 2 Bott, 776. A mandamus was granted for the justices to give costs to the party in whose favour the appeal had been determined; yet upon their return of it, the court held it reasonable for them to have the power of judging whether costs shall be allowed or not, and quashed the mandamus.

Rex v. Stansfield, Burr. S. C. 205; 2 Bott, 776. The sessions adjourned the appeal to the next sessions, and ordered four guineas costs to the appellants; which order was quashed as to the costs; for the sessions cannot give costs on a mere adjournment of the appeal, without hearing it.

St. Mary's, Nottingham, v. Kirklington, 2 Sess. Ca. 67; 2 Bott, 776. Motion for a mandamus to the justices, commanding them to allow Kirklington the expense their officers had been put to, in keeping a poor person from the time of his removal till the order was discharged by the sessions upon appeal. Mandamus granted.

And as to the enforcing or punishing disobedience of order of sessions, see Rex v. Mytton, 4 Doug. 333.

Rex v. Great Chart, Burr. S. C. 194; 2 Bott, 1015. An order was quashed by the sessions for insufficiency; and the sessions thereupon order that the costs of maintaining the pauper since the time of his removal shall abide the event of the cause, in case Great Chart shall think proper, by another order, to remove the pauper to Kennington; which order, as to the costs, was quashed by the Court of King's Bench, because the sessions must either give or not give costs at the time when they make their order. Semble, therefore the court at time of confirming an order subject to a case, should make a conditional order for costs and intervening maintenance.

Rex v. Cottingham, 4 Nev. & M. 215; 2 Ad. & E. 250, ante, 915. The sessions have power to award costs where the order is quashed for informality.

Rex v. J. Norfolk, 5 B. & Ald. 484; 1 D. & R. 69; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 22; and ante, 888. An order for the removal of Hannah, the wife of E. George, had been executed, but, by consent of the removing justices, had been superseded. It did not appear whether the costs of maintenance between the execution and supersedeas had been paid. The sessions had refused to enter the appeal. Upon a motion for a mandamus, Bayley, J. said, "In cases like this, the justices may exercise a discretion whether they will enter the appeal or not, so as best to answer the purposes of justice. If the parties removing do not choose to pay the expenses of maintenance incurred previously to the supersedeas, they may then enter the appeal for the purpose of compelling them to do so. If they are willing to do it, the sessions may refuse to enter the appeal. But costs cannot be granted unless the appeal is entered. (See Rex v. Essex, p. 227.)

No costs on an adjournment.

Mandamus lies to enforce.

Sessions must either give or not give costs at the time they make their order.

May give costs where order quashed for informality.

Appeal may be entered after the order has been abandoned by the removing parish, on neglect to pay the costs and maintenance.

PAGE 37.—After Rex v. St. Martin's, insert Golding v. Fenn, 7 Barn. & Cres. 765. A custom that there shall be a select vestry of an indefinite number of persons continued by election of new members made by itself and not by the parishioners, is valid in law. Semble, that it must be part of such custom that there should always be a reasonable number, and that the reasonableness of the number must be decided with reference to long established usage, and to the population of the parish, such custom having existed from time immemorial in a parish. In the year 1662, by a faculty granted by the Bishop of London, forty-nine persons, together with the vicar and churchwardens, were named as the select vestry, and that number was to be kept up by elections to be made by ten at least of those forty-nine, together with the vicar and churchwardens. In the year 1673 this number of ten was by another faculty reduced to seven, and these faculties were acted upon ever afterwards. Ten out of the fourteen vestrymen, exclusive of the vicar and churchwardens, who were present at the vestry holden next before the promulgation of the first faculty, were part of the forty-nine named in that faculty. Held, that as the vestry appointed by the faculty, and since continued, was not inconsistent with the vestry previously existing by the custom, the custom was not destroyed by the parish having accepted the faculty and acted upon it ever since, the faculty not being binding in law, and the vestry having power at any time to depart from its directions.

Case:—The rate appealed against was duly made on the 22d of September 1826, on the inhabitants and occupiers of lands, houses, shops, warehouses, and other tenements or hereditaments within the parish of St. Bridget, otherwise St. Bride, in the city of London, for the relief of the poor from Midsummer-day then last past to Michaelmas-day then next ensuing, being a rate of 1s. 6d. in the pound upon the annual rent or value of the said lands, houses, shops, warehouses and other tenements and hereditaments of and in the same parish, as far as the same could be ascertained. The City of London Gas Light and Coke Company was rated as follows:—

The 7 Geo. 3, c. 37, which enacts that certain lands to be embanked from the river Thames shall be “free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever,” exempts the occupiers of premises built on those lands from payment of poor rates in respect of such occupation.

pany, a part of which premises is in the said parish of St. Bridget, otherwise St. Bride, and liable to be rated thereto at the sum of 60*l.*, upon the annual rental or value of 800*l.*, and the remaining parts of such buildings, together with the wharf and premises, covering and comprising a space of 22,642 feet, superficial measure, which are assessed in the said rate, upon the annual rental or value of 400*l.*, and which the London Gas Light and Coke Company claim to be exempted from the said rate, are built upon ground and soil which were formerly part of the ground and soil of the river Thames, and were enclosed and embanked by the New River Company, and became vested in the City of London Gas Light and Coke Company as lessees for a term yet unexpired, of the adjoining wharf and ground in front of which the said ground and soil of the said river were so inclosed and embanked. The inclosure and embankment were made by the New River Company under the act 7 Geo. III. c. 37, by which (after reciting that it would tend to remove many inconveniences if the ground and soil of the river Thames between certain limits, including the land in question, was inclosed and embanked,) it was enacted, that it should and might be lawful for the mayor, aldermen and commons, in common-council assembled, to inclose and embank the said ground. By the second section the owners of wharfs abutting on this ground were authorized to inclose that part of it opposite their premises at their own expense, giving certain notices to the town-clerk of the city; and by the 51st section it was enacted, that the ground and soil of the said river so to be inclosed and embanked in the front of every such wharf, should vest in the owner of such adjoining wharf, free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever. By the 52d section certain quit-rents were imposed upon the land so to be inclosed; and a quit-rent, amounting to 23*l.* 11*s.* 8½*d.* per annum, payable by virtue of the act for the land in question, was redeemed by the New River Company, in the year 1769, for the sum of 471*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* An act was passed in the 39 Geo. III. entitled “An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor of the Parish of St. Bridget, otherwise St. Bride, Fleet Street;” by the 18th section of which the churchwardens and overseers of the poor were required “to make one general equal pound-rate or assessment for and towards the relief of the poor, and other the ends and purposes of the act, upon all and every person and persons who did or should inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy any land, house, shop, warehouse, coach-house, stable, cellar, vault, or any other building, tenement, or hereditament within the said parish, and on every other person and persons who by law was, were, or should be chargeable or liable to be assessed for or towards the relief of the poor.” In the 7 Geo. IV. an act to amend this act was passed, but the 35th section, relating to the poor rates, was the same as in the former statute. The New River Company, whilst in possession of the ground and soil for which the exemption is now claimed by the London Gas Light and Coke Company, were several years regularly rated to the poor rate of the parish of St. Bridget, otherwise St. Bride, in respect of the same, and of the buildings erected thereon, and paid their rates until 1825, when a new and higher assessment having been made, they objected to the rate, and claimed a total exemption. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether the said land, comprizing the said space of 22,642 superficial feet, the said wharf and premises, and the said buildings erected thereon, and which are assessed in the said rate upon the annual rental or value of 400*l.*, are liable to be rated to the relief of the poor of the said parish of St. Bridget, otherwise St. Bride? If the court should determine that the said last-mentioned wharf and premises, and the said buildings erected thereon, are liable by law to be rated to the relief of the poor of the said parish, the said rate is to be confirmed; but if they should be of opinion that the said last-mentioned premises are not liable to be so rated, the said rate is to be confirmed as to the sum of 60*l.* upon the annual rental or value of 800*l.*, and to be amended by striking out of the said rate the annual rental or value of 1200*l.*, and inserting instead thereof 800*l.*, and by striking out the sum of 90*l.* so assessed as aforesaid, and inserting instead thereof the sum of 60*l.* Lord Tenterden, C. J. “The question in this case is, whether certain property built on land embanked in pursuance of the statute 7 Geo. III. c. 37, is to be exempt from poor rates?

That act contemplated an undertaking likely to be productive of public benefit, and certain inducements were held forth to the city to carry it into execution, and it provided, that the land so embanked should vest in certain persons 'free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever,' and the question is, whether by those words the land is exempt from poor rates? It has already been decided that it is exempt from the land tax, and I know not upon what principle that decision could proceed, if it be not exempt from poor rates also. It is said that an aggregate sum was imposed upon the district for land tax, which was afterwards subdivided amongst the individuals having property there; and that it was immaterial to government how the division was made, provided the whole sum was raised. It was also said, that the act of parliament being in its nature private must be considered as a bargain between those who were parties to it, and that the city at large might in expectation of benefit from the embankment have consented that the land should not bear any part of the land tax. But that argument is equally applicable to the present case. The poor may be substituted for the government; the whole sum to be raised for them is first calculated; and the amount to be raised remains the same whatever be the property in the district liable to contribute. Again, the embankment might be beneficial in a peculiar manner to the parish as well as to the city at large, and the inhabitants of the parish might, on that account, agree that it should be exempt from poor rates. If the premises in question were exempt from this burden by the 7 Geo. III. c. 37, I think that no alteration has been made by the 39 Geo. III. and 7 Geo. IV.; for the object of those statutes was only to provide a new mode of making and raising assessments for the relief of the poor, and not to bring in any new matter as the subject of assessment which was not so before they passed. They merely enumerate more specially the same descriptions of property that were mentioned more generally in the stat. 43 Eliz. The recent acts were passed alio intuitu, and we ought not in justice, as we are not bound by any rule of law, to make them applicable to any new thing. We were then pressed with the case of Perchard v. Heywood (8 T. R. 486), where it was held that houses built on this land were liable to house and window tax. But that was a very different case. The object of the tax was to raise as large a sum as possible for the use of the public, and the amount raised would have been lessened had any houses been exempted, whereas the amount raised for land tax or poor rate would not; and I think that the decision as to the land tax ought to guide our judgment on this occasion. One or two very recent cases are analogous to this. In Chatfield v. Ruston (3 B. & C. 863), where a private inclosure act secured to the vicar of a parish a certain yearly sum of money 'free and clear of all rates, taxes, and deductions whatsoever,' it was held that he was not rateable in respect of that sum to the relief of the poor; and in Mitchell v. Fordham (6 B. & C. 274), it was held that the words 'free from all taxes and deductions whatsoever except land tax,' gave the like exemption from poor rates. For these reasons I think that the premises in question are exempt from poor rate, and that the rate must be amended." Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. The cases cited by my Lord Tenterden are in point. Besides, the house and window tax was a new one imposed after the exemption was given; and the exemption may be considered analogous to a covenant to pay taxes which applies to old taxes or others substituted for them, but not to taxes entirely new, unless there are express words to give it such extensive operation." Holroyd, J., concurred. Rate to be amended.

Page 176.—After Rex v. Regent's Canal Company, insert R. v. Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation, 2 B. & Ad. 14. Upon an appeal against a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of Heybridge, in the county of Essex, the court of quarter sessions amended the rate by reducing the sum of 800*l.* to 187*l.* 3*s.*, subject to the following case:—By an act of the 33 Geo. III. c. 93, intituled "An Act for Making and Maintaining a Navigable Communication between the town of Chelmsford, or some part of the parish of Springfield, in the county of Essex, and a place called Collier's Reach, in or near the river Blackwater, in the said county," certain persons therein named and their several and respective successors, executors, administrators, or assigns were united into a company by the name of "The Company of Proprietors of the Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation," and were authorized to purchase lands, tenements, or hereditaments for the use of the said navigation, and for other the purposes mentioned in the act, and to make and maintain navigable and passable for boats, barges, and other vessels, the said navigation through the several parishes therein mentioned. And in the same act it is provided "that the said navigation, or any works whatsoever to be made by virtue of the powers of this act, shall not be subject to the control, direction, survey, or order of any commissioners of sewers, or to any law or statute relating to sewers, any thing herein contained, or any former law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding. And the said company of proprietors shall and may from time to time hereafter be rated and charged to all parliamentary and parochial taxes, rates, and assessments, for or on account of any lands or grounds to be purchased or taken, or of any warehouses or other buildings to be erected by them in pursuance of this act, in the same proportions as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining to or lying near the same are or shall be rated and charged." In pursuance of the powers of this act, the company of proprietors made and completed the navigation before described, by deepening and cleansing, and in some places widening the channel of the river Blackwater, and by occasionally making cuts or deviations from the line of the river. These additional cuts, and the towing-paths along the whole line of navigation, were made upon lands purchased and held by the company under the powers of the act. It was admitted on the hearing of the appeal, that for these new cuts and the towing-paths, or the profits arising from them exclusively, and not for any profits arising from the old bed of the river, the appellants were rateable. In the parish of Heybridge the new cut leading to what is termed the sea-basin is something more than a mile and a half in length. In the other parishes through which the navigation passes the new cuts are of much less magnitude than in the parish of Heybridge, having been taken for the purpose of making locks and wears, the expenses of keeping up which are much greater than the profits accruing to the company in those respective parishes, from the land so taken, exclusive of the old bed of the river. If the company were to be rated for the new cuts, and for the wharfs and buildings occupied by them in the parish of Heybridge, according to the profits arising to them therefrom within the parish, the court found the sum of 187*l.* 3*s.* ought to be the sum inserted in the rate instead of 800*l.* But if the company were to be rated for their new cuts, wharfs, and buildings in the parish, without reference to navigation profits, in the same proportions as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining thereto in the parish of Heybridge, then the court found that the sum of 35*l.* ought to be inserted in the rate instead of 800*l.* The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the appellants were exempt from any rateability in respect of the land taken and used by them for the purposes of the navigation as aforesaid, beyond the value of the adjoining land? If so, then the sum to be inserted in the rate was to be reduced to 35*l.*; otherwise to stand at 187*l.* 3*s.* Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question in this case is upon the meaning of the words, 'in the same proportion as other lands, grounds, and buildings adjoining to, or being near the same, are or shall be rated or charged;' whether, in assessing the lands and buildings of the company, their value is to be estimated according to the value of other adjoining lands and buildings, or the assessment is to be made upon that proportion of the actual value (say three-fourths or four-fifths) upon which the other lands and buildings are assessed. I propose to consider the matter, first, without reference to any of the cases that bear upon the question; and secondly, with reference to those cases. The first thing that strikes the mind upon the latter construction of the act is, that it supposes the legislature to have contemplated, that property is not rated according to its actual value, but according to some part only of that value. In fact, this mode of rating is sometimes adopted; but I conceive the law generally assumes that all rateable property is to be rated according to its actual value. The statute of Elizabeth does not point to any other estimate. If all the property of the same kind in a parish is rated only upon some definite part of its actual value, the effect is the same as if the rate were upon the entire actual value, and no occupier of such property has any ground of complaint. If, in making the assessment, the rent is first considered, and then the rate upon land is made on a certain part of the rent, and the rate upon houses on some greater part of, or the whole rent, which is sometimes done, this is not properly a rating upon a part only of the value, but upon all the supposed real value; because, in estimating the value of land, it may be reasonable to make a greater deduction from the rent than is made from the rent of houses, on account of the greater expense (of cultivation and repairs) in the case of lands than in the case of houses. The act of parliament upon which the question arises, was passed for the purpose of making a river navigable. It was foreseen that this object could not be effectually accomplished without making, in some places, new cuts and channels deviating from the ancient course of the river, erecting locks or wears in some places to overcome the inconvenience of natural falls and changes of level, and erecting buildings for the residence of lock-keepers or collectors of tolls, or for warehousing merchandize, and power is therefore given to the company to purchase land for these purposes. It was well observed in the argument at the bar, that the ground taken for locks or wears would be productive of no value in the hands of the company, there being no lockage dues, but only a mileage toll. The company are not rateable in respect of the ancient course of the river, for the soil thereof is not vested in them, nor are they properly the occupiers thereof, but entitled only to the privilege of using it in the nature of an easement. No rate can be imposed upon tolls eo nomine, so that if there should happen to be in any parish no new cut or channel made, nor any profitable building erected, but land should be bought for locks and wears which are in themselves unprofitable, it might be contended that the company would not be rateable at all for the land so taken, and the rateable property in the parish would be pro tanto diminished, and the parish therefore would lose by the project authorized by the statute; while in another parish where land should be taken for a new cut or channel, or the erection of a profitable building, the amount of the mileage toll for passing along such new cut or channel, or the profit of the building, might be greater than the value of the neighbouring land, or the profit of similar buildings, and in this instance the parish would gain by the project. Whereas, if the land taken and buildings erected throughout the whole line are estimated and rated according to the value of the adjoining land and similar buildings, no parish will either lose or gain by the project, but every parish will be in the same situation as if the act had not passed, or nothing had been done under it. So, also, if the whole undertaking should prove unprofitable, as some projects of this kind have done, and the amount of the mileage toll, or receipts of the buildings erected, should be less than the value of the neighbouring land or of similar buildings, no parish would become a loser by the diminution of the value of rateable property within it, at whatever period of time such diminution might happen to take place. And if we suppose the legislature to have intended to prevent loss or gain to the parishes, and to leave all in the same state and condition as if no land were taken or building erected by virtue of the act, we must construe the words in question to mean, that the land and buildings of the company shall be estimated for the purpose of rates according to the value of other land and buildings adjoining or near: that the value shall be taken according to that rule, without regard to any increase or diminution of actual value. And the words used may certainly very well admit of this sense and construction. It may be observed, also, that this is an affirmative clause of the act, intended to designate the rating; and if it mean only that the company shall be rated on the same part of the value of their property as the adjoining lands and buildings, it will be quite useless and ineffectual, because a rate on a different part, whether greater or less, would be bad, being manifestly unequal and unjust. The two cases of the Grand Junction Canal and St. Peter the Great are plain authorities in favour of it, there being no substantial difference in the language of the statutes. In this case, therefore, the rate must be reduced to 35*l.*, that is, to the value of the land and buildings of the company, estimated according to the value of the adjoining lands and buildings, and not according to their actual productive value to the company." Rate reduced accordingly.

By an act for making a navigable communication between two places therein mentioned, a company was formed and authorized to purchase lands, &c. for the use of the navigation, and to make and maintain the same. The act then directed that the company should be rated and charged to all parliamentary and parochial taxes, rates, and assessments for any lands to be purchased or taken, or warehouses or other buildings to be erected by them in pursuance of that act, in the same proportions as other lands and buildings adjoining to or lying near the same were or should be rated and charged. Held, that the company were liable to be rated for their lands and buildings at the same value as other adjacent lands and buildings, and not according to the improved value derived from them being used for the purposes of the navigation.

Page 194.—After Rex v. Trent and Mersey Navigation Company, insert Rex v. Barnby Dun, 4 Nev. & Man. 436. Appeal of poor-rate quashed by sessions, subject to the following case;—The river Dun navigation commences in Tinsley, two miles east of Sheffield, and proceeds in an easterly direction down the course of the river Dun to Holmstile in Doncaster, and thence in an easterly direction, through the township of Barnby Dun, to Fishlock Ferry, whence it communicates with the river Ouse. By 12 Geo. I. c. 38, "for making the river Dun navigable from Holmstile in Doncaster, to Tinsley, a township near Sheffield," certain persons were appointed undertakers of the navigation, and empowered to make the river navigable from Holmstile to Tinsley, to make new cuts through the adjoining lands, and to receive certain rates and duties of tonnage. By 13 Geo. I. c. 20, "for improving the navigation of the river Dun from Holmstile to Wilsick House, in the parish of Barnby Dun," similar powers are given to certain other persons as to this part of the river. By 6 Geo. II. c. 9, the two navigation companies are united into one by the name of "The Company of Proprietors of the Navigation of the River Dun," and all powers given to the separate navigation companies are vested in the united company. In this act is the following clause:—"And be it further enacted, that the said company of proprietors, their successors or assigns, or any of them, shall not be taxed or assessed for the same, or the profits thereof, at any place or places except Sheffield or Doncaster aforesaid;"—at which places it was further provided that books of accounts should be kept. Under 13 Geo. II. c. 11, "for improving the navigation of the River Dun from Wilsick House, in the parish of Barnby Dun, to Fishlock Ferry," the navigation was continued to its present eastern extremity, and the Stainforth Cut (176 yards of which are in Barnby Dun) was made. By 2 Geo. IV, c. xlv., reciting that it would be advantageous to abandon the existing navigation in certain parts, and to make and maintain other cuts or canals in lieu thereof, the company are empowered to make certain cuts or canals, with proper towing paths, and, among others, a cut or canal from the lower end of an existing cut at Barnby Dun, to the upper end of Stainforth Cut: And in consideration of the expenses of making such cuts &c., the company were authorized to demand and receive certain rates and duties over and above all other rates and duties allowed to be taken by the former acts: And it was enacted, "that the intended cuts or canals, alterations and works, should be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun, and that all and every the provisoes, directions, restrictions, penalties, and forfeitures, in and by the thereinbefore recited acts (viz. the acts above-mentioned) and every of them, respecting the boatmen employed on the said river, the owners, commanders, masters, or rulers of boats, keels, or vessels, or other persons employed thereon, or passing the locks of the said river, or making obstructions thereon, or in any other respect relating thereto, or for the benefit or protection of the said navigation, and all other powers and authorities therein contained, should extend and be applicable to the said cuts, &c. as fully in every respect as if the said cuts, &c. had originally been part of the river Dun navigation, and had been inserted in the several acts." Under this act, the new cut in Barnby Dun was completed in 1830. The navigation company is thus rated in the rate appealed against, the rate being at one shilling in the pound upon a sum of 173*l.* 5*s.*:—"The river Dun Company's new cut or canal, land covered with water, basins, towing paths, locks and tolls, and other works." No objection is made by the appellants to the amount at which they are rated, and indeed it is admitted that the rate is fair, supposing that the company are liable to be rated at all. The township of Barnby Dun is co-extensive with the parish. The navigation through the township consists entirely of land, the length of the several parts of it being as follows:—The old cut 308 yards, the new cut 3498 yards, part of Stainforth cut 176 yards, total in Barnby Dun 3982 yards, nearly two miles and a quarter. The bed of the river is not used as a navigation. Previous to the completion of the new cut the company had been rated, and had paid rates in Barnby Dun upon a sum of 66*l.* 5*s.* Upon the completion of the new cut, the company were rated upon 173*l.* 5*s.*, upon which assessment they have paid one rate. The company also, in December, 1831, paid a highway composition in Barnby Dun upon the same assessment. Land was purchased by the company for making the new canal in Barnby Dun. The company is rated, by mutual agreement, in the adjoining township of Kirk Sandal, upon 90*l.* It is also rated in the adjoining township of Stainforth and in other townships. It is not rated in Sheffield;—indeed no part of this navigation is in the township of Sheffield, neither is it rated in the township of Tinsley, where it terminates. It is rated in the township of Doncaster upon 247*l.* 10*s.* The entire length of the navigation of the river is thirty miles, of which length at least twelve miles are canals or cuts. The questions for the consideration of the court are, first whether the company is liable to be rated in the township of Barnby Dun at all; and, secondly, if so liable, upon what sum, or in what manner, ought it to be rated in that township? Lord Denman, C. J. “I confess that a good deal of doubt has existed in my mind in the course of this argument. I am so very unwilling that any of these cases should be decided on general views of utility, which may vary in every court before which cases happen to come, that I am extremely anxious to see how the words of the statute will decide the case; and I think that the words of this statute are sufficient to decide that this company is exempt from the payment of rates in respect of the land in question, which land was taken under the powers of the act of 2 Geo. IV. It is true that words could hardly be less pertinent for the purposes which they really meant to carry into effect, than those employed in the first section of 6 Geo. II. giving the exemption itself. They say, “That the company of proprietors, their successors or assigns, or any of them, shall not be taxed or assessed for the same, or the profits thereof, at any place or places, except Sheffield or Doncaster aforesaid,” (those places at which the accounts were to be made up; but I think I cannot in any way connect the rateability with the mere making up of the accounts.) It seems to me, that though there are no words immediately preceding that clause, which can be properly referred to by the words “same or the profits thereof,” yet we are bound to suppose the legislature must have meant by the words “same” such of the before-mentioned articles as were capable of producing profits that might be rated. In that sense we must hold that the words “taxed or assessed for the same” refers to the navigation which was regulated by this act of parliament. Then the question is, whether the exemption so given is extended by 2 Geo. IV. to those lands which the company is enabled to take for the purposes of that act? The object of that act is to enable the company to “abandon the existing navigation in certain parts, and to make other cuts in lieu thereof;” and the company are empowered to make such cuts, with proper towing paths and so forth, and among others the cut in question. Then in consideration of the expense the company shall be at in making the new cuts &c., they are allowed to take certain additional rates and duties; and then it is further enacted, that the intended cuts and canals, alterations and works, shall be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun. Then there are other words, as to the effect of which I think very considerable doubt may be entertained. These first words, however, appear to me to be sufficient to establish the right of the company to exemption in respect of their newly-acquired lands, just in the same way as if they had possessed them under the act containing the original exemption clause. For, when it is said “that the said intended cuts &c., shall be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun,” we are then bound to say, that these cuts, being a part of the navigation of the river, the privileges of exemption, which the company possessed in respect of the original works, are conferred upon them in respect of those which are substituted. [The Solicitor-General suggested that there were parts of the navigation made between 6 Geo. II. and 2 Geo. IV. which were admitted not to be exempt, and which had always been rated.] At present the question is confined to the lands that were taken under 2 Geo. IV. and I am proceeding on the principle that those lands are distinctly substituted for, and put in the same situation as the lands that were exempted under the original statute. It seems to me, therefore, that the sessions have done right in quashing the rate, and that we must confirm their order." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that the original exemption in 6 Geo. II. is sufficiently extensive to exempt this land from poor-rates, except so far as they are to be taken in Sheffield and Doncaster. It seems to be admitted that the words, "taxed, or assessed" are sufficient to exempt from poor-rates, as was decided in Rex v. London Gas Light Company. If that be so, the question is as to the construction of 2 Geo. IV. which authorizes the company to abandon certain parts of the existing navigation, and to make new cuts, &c., in lieu thereof. It appears to me, that as this cut was merely a substitution for what was before exempted, it ought to be governed by the same rules, and subject to the same exemptions. I do not mean to say that this would be so, if there were no clause in 2 Geo. IV. enacting that the intended cuts &c. should be considered and taken as part of the navigation of the river Dun, &c. It is admitted that this clause does not in express words confer any exemption, but the question is, whether the effect of the whole of those words taken together, though the particular word is not used, does not give an exemption? It seems to me, that it gives exactly the same exemption as the previous statute gave as to the original works. Though, generally speaking, where the parish are entitled to rate any portion of land, that right is not taken away, unless there be some express reason for it, I do not apprehend that it is necessary to use in distinct terms the word "exemption." If, upon a fair construction of the act, the exemption appears, the right of the parish to rate the particular land is effectually taken away, though the word "exemption" be not used. It seems to me, therefore, that as this cut is a substitution for the bed of the river, it is governed by the same rules as the original navigation, and that the company are exempt." Williams, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. I agree that it is not desirable in these cases to attempt to lay down any general rules, because the question must depend upon the language of the acts of parliament in each case. It is undoubtedly true, that it is incumbent on the appellants to show that by some express clause they are protected from rateability; otherwise it would follow as a matter of course that the statutory liability would be imposed upon them, and they would be subject to be rated for this cut. Therefore, the matter comes to this single question, whether the two acts of parliament taken together do constitute that exemption? The words, "the same, and the profits thereof," which are found in the clause of 6 Geo. II. can with no propriety be referred to any thing but the navigation. This clause must, in my opinion, be understood as constituting an exemption from being assessed to the poor-rates in the township of Barnby Dun. Then comes the second question namely, Whether the new works, made under 2 Geo. IV. are in like manner exempt? and I own, if the question had stood upon those general words, "provisoos, directions, instructions, penalties, forfeitures," &c., there not being introduced into the clause the word "exemption," I should have had great difficulty in saying that these words touched the question of exemption from taxes or assessments. But it seems to me to be quite clear, from the other words which have been referred to, that the intended cuts, &c., did, when they were made, become identical with the original navigation of the river Dun. This consideration disposes of the question; and I am of opinion, that as the original navigation was exempt, so also are the substituted cuts and canals." Order of sessions confirmed.

An inclosure act provided that certain allotments for

Page 205.—After Rex v. Sculcoates insert Rex v. Pitt, 5 B. & Ad. 565. Appeal against a poor rate for the township of Kyo, confirmed by the sessions, subject to the following case:—By an act of parliament, 40 Geo. III. c. 25 (private) intituled “An Act for dividing, allotting, and inclosing a Common called Tanfield Moor, in the Parish of Chester-le-Street, in the County of Durham,” after reciting that the Marquisses of Bute and Hertford, and the Earl of Windsor, were seised of or entitled to the soil of the said common, and to the quarries of stone, and all other mines and minerals, except the coal mines and seams of coal within and under the same, as tenants in common, in the shares and proportions therein mentioned, and that W. M. Pitt, Esq. was seised of or entitled to the collieries and coal mines, and seams of coal, as well opened as not opened, lying and being within and under the said common, together with certain liberties in and over the same for the winning, working, managing, and carrying on the said collieries, and for leading and carrying away the coals; and that certain persons therein named, and several other persons, as owners of messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, were entitled to right of common in and upon the said common, it was enacted that the commissioners therein named, after deducting so much of the said moor or common as was by the said act directed to be set out for public highways, roads, and drains, and for a common quarry or quarries, common watering places or wells, should set out, allot, and appoint unto and for the said Marquisses of Bute and Hertford, and Earl of Windsor, one full sixteenth part in value, (quantity, quality, and situation considered), of the said residue of the said common as a compensation for their right to the soil of the said common or moor, and for their consent to the division and inclosure thereof, which said sixteenth should be deemed, and was thereby declared, to be within the township of Tanfield; and after the said sixteenth part should be so set out and allotted, should set out and allot the remaining part of the said common unto and among the several persons having right of common upon the said common, in proportion and according to the rents or values of their respective messuages, lands, or tenements in respect whereof they were severally entitled thereto as aforesaid, in the proportions therein mentioned. And it was further enacted, “that all the allotments to be set out to the several persons having right of common upon the said moor or common, should be deemed and were thereby declared to be situate within and parcel of the same townships and places respectively wherein the lands or estates lie in respect of which such allotments should be made.” And it was enacted, “that all such lands and grounds as should by virtue of the said act be allotted to any person or persons for or in right of their respective messuages, mills, lands, or tenements, should be held by such person or persons respectively in the same manner, and should be of the same nature and tenure as their respective messuages, mills, lands, or tenements, in right or in respect of which such allotments should be made, were holden respectively.” And it was also enacted that nothing therein contained should be construed to defeat, lessen, prejudice, or anywise affect the right or interest of W. M. Pitt, his heirs or assigns, of, in, and to the coal mines and seams of coals, as well opened as not opened, within and under the said common, but that the said W. M. Pitt, his heirs and assigns, should for ever thereafter have, hold, work, and enjoy all and every the coal mines and seams of coal, as well opened as not opened, lying and being within and under the said common. Pursuant to the said act, the common was divided, allotted, and inclosed. At the time of the passing of the act the whole of the common was situated within the chapelry of Tanfield. The lands or estates in respect of which allotments were set out are of various tenures, some being freehold, some copyhold, and some leasehold; and several of such lands or estates are situate within the township of Kyo, and other adjoining townships; and by the clauses in the said act before stated, such allotments became and now form part of the respective townships in which the lands or estates, in respect of which such allotments were set out, are situated, and are of the same natures and tenures as such lands or estates in right or respect of which they are respectively holden. Previous to and for some time after the said division, the coal under the said common was rated to the relief of the poor of the chapelry of Tanfield; but rights of common should be deemed to be situate within the townships in which the commonable lands lay, but nothing therein was to affect the right to coal mines under them: Held, that the coal mines were rateable the same as before the act passed.

Addenda.

some time ago, the coal under the allotments set out in respect of estates in the township of Kyo, and also in another adjoining township, was rated to the poor rates for those townships. The coal mines for which the appellant was rated are within and under allotments of the said common, allotted in respect of lands situate within the township of Kyo. Denman, C. J. "The allotments to be set out to the several persons having right of common are to be transferred to the townships and places wherein the lands lie, in respect of which such allotments are made. Now, first, it does not appear that Pitt had any right of common. The soil is reserved to him in all respects as it was before the act, and his coals were then in the chapelry of Tanfield. Then the words of the enacting clause cannot have the operation contended for." Parke, J. "Before the act, the coal and soil were all in the township of Tanfield. By the act of parliament, the allotments set out to the several persons having right of common are taken out of that parish, and are to be deemed situate in the townships and places where the lands lie, in respect of which the allotments are made: what is allotted to the commoners, and no more, passes out of the township. The coals were not allotted to the commoners; the commissioners only set out the surface of the soil, which does not include the coals. It is expressly enacted that Pitt's right in them shall not be affected; but it would be so by the transfer contended for." Taunton, J. "The land substituted for the right of common is made of the same tenure and quality, and is to be deemed as having such local situation, as the land in respect of which such right of common originally existed; that is the whole enactment; and it has nothing to do with the coal. Pitt's right is expressly reserved in all particulars. I have not the smallest doubt that the coals are rateable in the same place as they were before the act. This was the construction first put upon the act, for the coals were rated in Tanfield. Why that was changed, I cannot say. The first construction was right." Patterson, J. "I agree in the general doctrine, that the owner of the surface is the owner of the soil, down to the centre; but the question here turns on the meaning of the word allotment. The act says that the allotments to the commoners shall be deemed to be situate in the place wherein the land lies, in respect of which they are made. Now what is allotted? Not Mr. Pitt's coal mines, for his rights in them are expressly reserved. It is quite clear, therefore, that the locality of his coal mines is not operated upon by the act. Order of sessions quashed.

Application to sessions for the repayment of money where too high a rate is levied, under 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, must be made either to the sessions at which the appeal was heard, or at which the rates were reduced.

Page 218.—After Rex v. Essex insert Rex v. Justices of St. Peter's Liberty, York, 4 B. & Ad. 342. In August, 1828, the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation were rated to the relief of the poor of the township of Brotherton, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, in the sum of 150*l.* on a total annual value of 2000*l.* as "the owners and occupiers of a cut or canal, and that part of the river Aire lying within the township of Brotherton, the dams, locks, and weirs, tolls, dues, &c." They appealed against the rate at the October sessions, and the appeal was entered and respited until the Christmas sessions, but the overseers of Brotherton had no notice in writing of the entry and respite, and in December they distrained a vessel belonging to the company for the amount of the rate. The company, to prevent the vessel being sold, paid the 150*l.* under a protest, and 13*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.* costs. At the Christmas sessions the appeal was heard, and a case granted for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench; and that court, on hearing the argument in Trinity term, 1829 (9 B. & C. 820), decided that the company were not rateable in respect of the river, and sent the rate back to the sessions to be amended by striking out that part. While this appeal was pending, other rates were made on the company for the same amount, and in the same terms, and appealed against; and on the hearing of an appeal against one of these rates in January, 1830, the sessions amended the same by striking out the words "and that part of the river Aire," subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench on the question whether the company were rateable for dams on the river; and that court on the 21st of January, 1832 (3 B. & Ad. 139), made a rule that the rate should be sent back to be amended by reducing it from 150*l.* to 15*l.* 16*s.*, the amount chargeable on the canal and lock. At the April sessions, 1832, the rates were reduced from 150*l.* to 15*l.* 16*s.* pursuant to the rules of court. A demand was afterwards made on the overseers of Brotherton for the difference in amount between the sums due from the company on the rates as ultimately amended, and the sums paid to the overseers of Brotherton, under the distress in December, 1828, and afterwards upon the subsequent rates. At the October sessions, an application was made by the company for an order of sessions on the overseers to refund the sums of money so paid to them, after deducting the amount of the several rates chargeable. That court refused to make any order, on the ground that the application ought to have been made at the April sessions, when the rates were altered. A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus to the justices to make the order. Denman, C. J. The motion ought to have been made either to the court of quarter sessions which heard the appeal, or to the court which ordered the sums rated on the company to be decreased or lowered. The application here was too late." Littledale, J. concurred. Taunton, J. "The court of quarter sessions had no power to order money improperly paid to overseers to be refunded until this statute gave it them; and the statute limits the power to the court of sessions which heard the appeal, or at least to the court which orders the sums rated on any person to be lowered. No application was made in this case to either one or the other." Patteson, J. concurred. Rule discharged.

Priestley v. Watson, 2 Crom. & Mees. 691. Assumpsit by the plaintiff, as clerk to the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation, against the defendant, an overseer of Brotherton, for money had and received by the defendant, to the use of the undertakers, and on an account stated. Plea—the general issue. At the trial before Alderson, J., at the Spring Assizes for the county of York, 1833, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for 163*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.* Case:—On the 15th August, 1828, the overseers of the poor of the township of Brotherton, in the county of York, of whom the defendant was one, duly made and published a rate for the relief of the poor of the said township, in which they rated the said undertakers at the sum of 150*l.* in respect of property of the annual value of 2000*l.* Against this rate the said undertakers entered an appeal at the October sessions, 1828, which appeal was respited till the following sessions in January, 1829. On the 15th December, 1828, after summons and refusal to pay, a distress was duly made by the said defendant, who was one of the overseers of Brotherton, on a vessel belonging to the said undertakers, for 150*l.*, being the amount of the said rate; and, to prevent a sale, the sum of 163*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.*, being the amount of the said rate and of the expenses of the said distress, were paid to the defendant, being still overseer of the poor, who was at the same time served with the following written protest signed by the company's clerk, and expressed to be on behalf of the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation:—

"I do hereby tender you the sum of 150*l.*, for which you have distrained the goods and chattels of the said undertakers, and also the sum of 13*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.*; for costs of distress, making together the sum of 163*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.*; but I do on their behalf hereby protest against your right to recover the same by the illegal distress you have made; and I do hereby give you notice that an action will be brought for restitution and for damages. Dated 15th December, 1828."

And the defendant on that occasion gave a receipt for the said sum of 163*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.*, of which the following is a copy:—

"Received, the 15th December, 1828, of the Aire and Calder Navigation (by payment of J. P. S.) the sum of 150*l.* claimed and distrained for by the township of Brotherton for poor-rates, upon the undertakers of the said navigation, together with 13*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.* for costs attending the distraining the same:—

13	3	3½
£163	3	3½

(Signed)

E. W., one of the overseers of the poor of the said township of Brotherton."

Where an overseer distrains for a rate, not knowing there is an appeal against it, and immediately pays over the money so levied to a guardian under 22 Geo. 2, c. 83, and the rate is afterwards lowered on the appeal being heard, the overseer not being a wrong-doer will not be liable in money had and received.

Addenda.

At the January sessions, 1829, the rate was confirmed by an order of sessions, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench; and, whilst the decision of this case was pending, viz., on 27th March, 1829, another rate was made by the overseers of the said township of Brotherton, in which a similar charge was made on the said undertakers in respect of the same property, assessed at the same annual value of 2000*l.*; against which rate the said undertakers appealed to the then next sessions, which appeal was respited; but before the following sessions, viz. in Trinity Term, 1829, the Court of King's Bench ordered that the order of sessions confirming the rate of the 15th August, 1828, should be quashed, and the said rate amended by an order, of which the following is a copy:—

“ King's Bench.—Wednesday next after three weeks of the Holy Trinity, in the tenth year of King George the Fourth.

“ Liberty of St. Peter's, York.—The King v. The Undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation.—Upon hearing the counsel on both sides, it is ordered that an order of sessions made on the appeal of the defendants against a rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of the township of Brotherton, in the west riding of the county of York, and within the liberty of St. Peter's, York, be quashed for the insufficiency thereof, and that the sessions do amend the said rate by striking out therefrom the assessment made upon the defendants in respect of that part of the river Aire which lies within the said township of Brotherton. And it is further ordered, that the defendants have leave to give a new notice of appeal against the said rate or assessment, and to specify therein, if they think fit, any new ground of appeal against the said rate or assessment.”

At the July sessions, 1829, the appeal against the rate of the 27th March, 1829, was heard, and that rate was amended by increasing the assessment on the annual value of the rateable property of the said undertakers in the said township from 2000*l.* to 2010*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, and an order of sessions was made accordingly, subject to a second case for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench. The overseers of the poor of the said township, however, continued, until the determination of the Court of King's Bench on such second case, to make rates for the relief of the poor, in all of which the said undertakers were rated upon property assessed at the annual value of 2010*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*; and the said undertakers continued to appeal against each of such rates to the quarter sessions. At the January sessions, 1830, the appeal against the rate of August, 1828, was respited to the next sessions, no notice having been given to the sessions of the order of the King's Bench of Trinity Term, 1829, hereinbefore mentioned. No further notice of that appeal appears in the records of the sessions, nor any other respite thereof during 1830, 1831, nor until the Easter sessions, 1832. At the Easter sessions, 1832, the rate of the 15th August, 1828, and all the subsequent rates, were amended by reducing the annual value of the rateable property of the said undertakers in the said township to 15*l.* 16*s.* Upon such reductions the amount of all the before-mentioned rates, payable by the said undertakers to the overseers of Brotherton, was 12*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* only. The said undertakers made no application at the July sessions, 1832, for any order directing the overseers of the township of Brotherton to refund to the said undertakers the sum of money so paid to the said defendant as aforesaid, deducting the said sum of 12*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*, nor was any entry made, nor any proceeding had respecting the said rate; but on the 12th October, 1832, the following notice was served on the defendant:—

“ To the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of the township of Brotherton, in the liberty of St. Peter of York, in the west riding of the county of York, and every of them, and especially to Edward Watson and Walker Smith, and to each of them.

“ As the solicitor and law agent, and on behalf of the undertakers of the navigation of the rivers Aire and Calder, in the west riding of the county of York, I hereby demand of you to repay and return to the said undertakers the sum of money which was paid to you by the said undertakers or their agent, on or about the 15th day of December, 1828, as the amount of a certain rate or assessment bearing date the 15th day of August, 1828, for and towards the necessary relief of the poor of the said township of Brotherton, rated and assessed upon the said undertakers as owners and occupiers of a cut or canal, and that part of the river Aire within the township of Brotherton, dams, locks, and weirs, and tolls, dues, or rates, and the costs, charges, and expenses of putting into execution a warrant of distress for the same rate, bearing date on or about the 22d day of November, 1828, under the hands and seals of Henry John Dickins, Esq., and Dauson Richardson Currer, clerk, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said liberty, after deducting thereout such sum and sums of money as are due from the said undertakers for the rates or assessments rated and assessed upon them in respect of their property in the said township of Brotherton, and which have been amended and reduced by the general quarter sessions in and for the said liberty, in pursuance of the order and direction of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench in that behalf; and also take notice, that in case you shall refuse or neglect to pay the same to me, or to Mr. Joseph Priestley, at the office of the said undertakers in Wakefield, within six days from the service hereof, an application will be made to the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for and in the said liberty on the 20th day of October instant, as soon as counsel can be heard, for an order of the said court to be made upon you, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said township of Brotherton, to repay and return to the said undertakers all such sum and sums of money as they ought not to have paid or been charged with; and also to pay to the said undertakers, or their said agent, all costs, charges, and expenses occasioned by their having paid, and having been required to pay the said sum of money so wrongfully charged upon them as aforesaid, in respect of the said rate or assessment above mentioned. Dated 11th October, 1832. SAMUEL HAILSTONE."

The said undertakers accordingly made an application at the following October sessions, 1832, for an order directing the overseers of the said township of Brotherton to refund to the said undertakers the said sum of money so paid to the said defendant as aforesaid, deducting therefrom such sum as was due according to the said amended rates; which application was refused by the said justices at the said sessions. In the years 1826 and 1827, and from thence to the time of the distress, between two and three pounds, but never more than five pounds a-year, had been collected for poor-rates from the said undertakers by the overseers of Brotherton, but no rate-books were produced at the trial previous to August, 1828. The defendant Watson was one of the overseers of the poor of Brotherton for the years 1828, 1829, 1830, 1831, and 1832 respectively, but with different coadjutors in each of these years. The township of Brotherton, long before and since August, 1828, adopted the provisions and complied with the requisites of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, commonly called Gilbert's act, and the said sum of 150*l.*, on the same day that it was received, was paid over by the defendant to W. Smith, the guardian of the poor of the township of Brotherton, appointed under that act before the rate was made, and who had continued to be so up to the time of his receipt of the money, and was so at the time of the action brought. The money so paid was appropriated by the guardian to the fund for the general relief of the poor of the township, and had been expended before the 12th of October, 1832. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether under the above circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to recover the said sum of 163*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.*, or any and what part thereof.

The points stated for argument on the part of the plaintiff were, that the undertakers of the navigation were entitled to recover the whole amount for which the verdict was entered, as a payment made under compulsory process, which was subsequently determined to be illegal, deducting only the sum of 12*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*, the amount of all the amended and reduced rates.

On the part of the defendant.—First, that the money was paid to the defendant as overseer of the township of Brotherton, and by him immediately paid over to the guardian of the poor of that township, pursuant to the stat. 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 7, 8; secondly, that it did not appear that the distress was illegal, and that the defendant was within the stat. 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 1, 2, 3, 4, & 8; thirdly, that the plaintiff had neither proved a demand of the perusal and copy of the warrant of distress, nor that the action was commenced within six months after the act committed, pursuant to the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6 & 8.

Lord Lyndhurst, C. B. "We are not to conjecture that a notice of appeal was given. It is essential that such notice should have been given, and, if it had been, it ought to have been proved." Alderson, B. "Under this act the defendant was bound to pay over the money to the guardian, and the action is not brought until it is paid over. It does not appear that any notice of appeal was given at the time of the levy. The defendant is not shown to be a wrong-doer, and the action, therefore, cannot be maintained." Judgment for the defendant.

Appeal to poor rate adjourned, and grounds of appeal stated, in order of respite, no further notice held necessary at the following sessions.

Page 221.—After Rex v. Justices of Wilts insert Rex v. Justices of Hertfordshire, 1 Nev. & Man. 331; S. C. 4 B. & Adol. 561. Solomon Baxter, intending to appeal against a poor rate, served his notices in due time for the October sessions in Hertfordshire, 1832, and attended there ready to try, and to prove notice. The appeal being called on, counsel appeared for the respondents, and prayed a respite, alleging that the respondents had not had time to prepare their defence to the grounds of appeal stated in the notice, which were fifteen in number. The appellant opposed the respite; but it was granted, on payment of costs. Notice of appeal was not proved, nor an admission of it required. One of the notices was handed by the respondent's counsel to the clerk of the peace, and was thereupon (as the appellant represented) filed with the records of the sessions; but the respondents alleged that it was merely furnished to the clerk of the peace for his convenience, to assist him in making out the order of respite. This order (which set forth the grounds of appeal stated in the notice) was served on the churchwardens and overseers of the respondent parish on the 21st of December; but they had no further notice of appeal. At the next sessions (31st December) the appeal was called on, and the respondents' counsel objected to its being heard without proof of the original notice. This the appellant was not prepared to give, conceiving that the fact had been admitted at the former sessions, and proof of it now was unnecessary; but he offered to prove the order of respite. The sessions held this insufficient, and confirmed the rate with costs. A rule nisi was afterwards obtained in this court for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal. Per Curiam. "The respondents had acted upon the notice so as to make further proof unnecessary. The sessions ought to hear the appeal." Rule absolute.

Held, per Coleridge, J. in the outer court, that under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 72, an application for an order on the putative father of a bastard child need not in all cases be made to the first sessions after the child becomes chargeable, but must be made to the first sessions

Page 275.—Insert Rex v. Justices of Oxfordshire, 6 Nev. & Man. 351. In June, 1835, a fortnight before the Midsummer sessions, a young woman was delivered of a bastard child at Bletchington, in Oxfordshire. At the October sessions, the overseer of that parish went with the mother of the child to the sessions, to procure an order upon the putative father, but finding that it was necessary to be provided with corroborative evidence, he made no application then to the court, but returned to procure such evidence. At the Epiphany sessions he applied by counsel for an order, but the justices decided that the application was made too late, and refused to entertain it. Churchill, in Hilary term last, obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices, requiring them to hear the application; against which cause was shown before Coleridge, J. in the outer court. Cur. ad. vult. On the first day of Trinity at which it can be made with effect.

term, Coleridge, J. delivered judgment. "This was an application for a mandamus to the justices of Oxfordshire, to hear an application for an order in bastardy. The child was born previously to the Summer sessions, 1835, and the overseers gave notice to the putative father that they should apply to the justices at the Michaelmas sessions for an order. At that time, not being prepared with corroborative testimony, they made no application; but they did make an application at the last Epiphany sessions, which was refused by the justices, as being too late. There was no doubt that the child was chargeable before the October sessions, and that the father was then known. There are two conditions precedent to the application for this order,—the birth of the child, and its chargeability; and the application must be made to the sessions next after the occurrence of these events. There is a third provision, namely, "after diligent inquiry as to the father,"—which is probably to be considered as merely directory. The question then is, what is the next sessions after the birth of the child and its becoming chargeable? It was contended that the child may be said to become chargeable upon every fresh act of relief, like the case of a trespass which is continued, in which there is every day a fresh trespass. But I am of opinion that this cannot have been the intention of the legislature; for if it were, the time would be prolonged indefinitely to the end of seven years. I have considered this question with reference to the well-known provision as to appeals made against orders of removal, by which it is required that such appeals shall be made to the next sessions. That has been holden to signify that the appeal must be to the next practicable sessions. And I am clearly of opinion that the parish officers are not bound to apply to a sessions which could not proceed with effect to adjudicate upon the application; and therefore if the application be made to the next sessions after the child is born and after it has become chargeable, to which the overseers can apply with effect, it is sufficient. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances as to that. If the overseers have not been able, after using due diligence, to ascertain the putative father, or to discover any corroborative testimony, they would not be bound to apply to the next sessions; but, at a subsequent sessions, the justices would take these matters into consideration, and determine that those were the next possible sessions to which the application could be made. The provision,—as to the limitation of maintenance to six months,—in the 73d section, has been referred to, to show that the application need not be made to the very next sessions. But I think there is nothing in that argument; for that provision applies only to the hearing, and the hearing may be deferred for a long period, on many grounds; as, the absence of a witness, or many other cases which may be suggested. But the legislature, by using the word next, must clearly have intended some limitation as to the time of the application. Now, it is to be considered that the object of the legislature was to restrict the liability of the putative father, and to give him advantages which he did not before possess; but if it were to be held that the application need not be made at the next practicable sessions, but might be made subsequently, there could be no limitation but the seven years. That would be a great disadvantage to the putative father, which he did not labour under by the old law. The best rule for this court to lay down, therefore, is, that the application must be made to the next sessions, leaving a discretion to the justices to determine in each case whether, under the circumstances, it could have been made sooner with effect,—which determination will still remain subject to the revision of this court. Now in this case, applying the above doctrine, it is clear that the child was chargeable before the October sessions; the father was known to the overseers, and they did not apply to those sessions, only because, through ignorance or inadvertence, they were unprepared with corroborative testimony: but they must be taken to have known the law, and what evidence would be required. The overseers not being prepared with the requisite evidence did not apply to the next practicable sessions, and the justices at the Epiphany sessions exercised their discretion properly, in refusing to entertain the application. This rule must be discharged, but, under the circumstances, without costs."

An application for an order under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, for the maintenance of a bastard child which had had become chargeable sixteen days before the October sessions was made to the Epiphany sessions, without good reason shown why the application had not been sooner made: Held, that the sessions had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Quære, whether the application must in all cases be made to the first sessions after the child becomes chargeable.

Page 275.—Insert Rex v. Heath, 6 Nev. & M. 345.—At the quarter sessions held at Petworth, on the 8th January, 1835, an order was made on Charles Heath, of the parish of Stopham, as the father of a male bastard child, to reimburse the parish of Stopham for the maintenance of the child, under the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, subject to the opinion of this Court upon the following case:—Eliza Penfold, of the parish of Stopham, single woman, was, on the 16th August, 1834, delivered of a male bastard child, which became, on the 29th September in the same year, chargeable to Stopham, and continued so until the making of the said order. The quarter sessions next after the 29th September, 1834, was held at Chichester, for the said county, on the 15th day of October in the same year. No application was made by the overseers of Stopham for an order on Charles Heath, in respect of the said bastard child, until the quarter sessions held at Petworth, on the 8th January, 1835, nor was any notice served on him by the overseers of Stopham, of any intention to make such application, until the 9th December, 1834. It was objected, on the part of the said Charles Heath, that the sessions held on the 8th January, 1835, had no jurisdiction to hear such application. This objection was overruled. The Court also considered that it was not necessary for the overseers to show that they had made diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, previous to the October sessions; and they held, that though the child became chargeable on the 29th September, still that the application to the Epiphany quarter sessions was in sufficient time under the provisions of the statute. Lord Denman, C. J. "The objection was taken in this case, that the Court of quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to hear the application of the overseers. Whether or not the court had jurisdiction depends on the 72d section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. That section declares, that where an illegitimate child becomes chargeable to any parish, the overseers may, if they think proper, after diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, apply—not to the quarter sessions of the peace generally, but—to the next general quarter sessions of the peace. It is reasonable and just that there should be some limitation. The legislature evidently intended that the application should be prompt, lest the overseers should defer the application until the party charged had lost all means of proving that he was not the father of the child. Whether the period of limitation is to begin from the time when the child becomes chargeable, or the father is discovered, or after diligent inquiry as to the father, the court of quarter sessions had not, on any supposition, jurisdiction in this case." Littledale, J. "I am not without doubt; but, upon the whole, I am disposed to think that the 72d section requires the application to be made to the first sessions. Whether that is the sessions next after the child becomes chargeable, or next after the father is ascertained, it is not necessary now to determine. The words of the act are, that when any child shall be born a bastard, and shall become chargeable to any parish, the overseers may, if they think proper, after diligent inquiry as to the father, apply to the next general quarter sessions of the peace. I am rather disposed to think that the application ought to be made to the first sessions after the child becomes chargeable. It has been urged, that unless the father is known, it is impossible to make the application to the next sessions. The words of the statute are however plain, and we are not to put a forced construction upon plain and intelligible language. If the act is not sufficiently explicit, it ought to be amended. The sessions had, in the present case, no jurisdiction. Notice of the intended application was not given to Heath until the 9th of December. The child was born on the preceding 16th of August, and became chargeable on the 29th September. It is not stated when the overseers knew who the father was, and it does not appear that they did not know him shortly after the birth of the child, and fourteen days before the October sessions, so as to be in a situation to apply to those sessions for an order of maintenance." Patteson, J. "I do not see how to avoid the construction put upon the 72d section by my lord and my brother Littledale. The words are plain, and we have to right to attach a meaning to those words different from that which they ordinarily bear. These are the words of the statute, when any child shall hereafter be born a bastard, and shall by, &c. become chargeable to any parish, the overseers may, if they think proper,' (and 'if they think proper' means that they are not bound to make the application at all,) 'after diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, apply to the next general quarter sessions of the peace.' This is plain and intelligible language. The child in the present case was chargeable on the 29th September, and the sessions were held on the 13th of the following October. Those were prima facie the sessions at which the application should be made. This construction is fortified by the next section, which provides that if there be not sufficient time, previously to such sessions, to give the person intended to be charged as the father of such child fourteen days' notice, the hearing of the application shall be deferred to the next sessions. This 73d section, however, is relied on as showing that by the expression 'next sessions,' is meant the first practicable sessions. Suppose a child was born and became chargeable on the 12th of October, and the sessions were held on the 14th, it may be that the overseers are not bound to make the application to those sessions. In the present case there was sufficient time to give fourteen days' notice, and whatever may be the effect of the statute where there are not fourteen days between the birth and the sessions, that is immaterial to the present question. In the present case, at all events, it lay upon the overseers to show by evidence why they did not make their application at an earlier period. It is objected that there was not sufficient time to make diligent inquiry as to the father, and that the overseers may not have known who he was. That however was not shown in evidence, and the sessions considered that it was unnecessary. For any thing that appears on the statement of this case, the overseers may have known who the father was shortly after the child was born." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. The words of the statute are plain. The case shortly amounts to this:—that prima facie the application was too late. That objection was taken, and the overseers did not show why they had not applied earlier. If any reasons had been shown why the application had not been made in October, that would have wholly varied the case. The January sessions were not the next, and no explanation was given why the first sessions were passed over."—Order of sessions quashed.

Page 492.—After Rex v. St. George, Exeter, insert Rex v. Haughley, 4 B. & Ad. 650, S. C.; 1 Nev. & M. 525. Upon an appeal against an order for the removal of Thomas Rampling, his wife and son, from the parish of Mendlesham, in the hundred of Stow, to the parish of Haughley, both in the county of Suffolk, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the following case:—By an act of 18 Geo. III. c. 35, all persons seised of messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, of the annual value of 30*l.* and upwards, in the parishes within the hundred of Stow in the county of Suffolk, were incorporated by the name of "the guardians of the poor within the hundred of Stow in the county of Suffolk," and were to have a common seal, and to sue and be sued by that name, and the poor in the said hundred were placed under the management of the said corporation; and it was enacted, that it should be lawful for the directors and acting guardians thereafter mentioned, at any general meeting, or at any of the quarterly meetings by that act directed to be held, with the consent of the justices of the peace, to bind any poor child or children under their management apprentice for such term as they should see fit, not exceeding seven years, in like manner as churchwardens and overseers of the poor, with the assent of the justices of the peace, were then by law empowered to do. The act afterwards directed, that the acting guardians, or so many of them as should think fit, should assemble on the 24th day of June then next, and elect by ballot twelve of the guardians, who should be called directors of the poor within the said hundred. The qualification of a director was, the being seised of messuages, &c., of the annual value of 30*l.*; but it was provided, that such of the guardians as were seised of messuages, &c., of the annual value of 400*l.*, and the justices resident in the hundred, should be directors without ballot. A poorhouse was to be built under the management of the directors; and upon its being finished, a general meeting of the guardians was to be held, at which the vacancies which had occurred among the directors who had been balloted for were to be filled up; and the guardians were at a meeting to elect twenty-four guardians, who, together with the directors qualified as aforesaid, and the twelve directors chosen by ballot, were to be the directors and acting guardians of the said hundred, for putting in execution all the powers and authorities of that act. The directors and acting guardians were to hold four general quarterly meetings in each year; one of them to be always held on the Friday after the 24th of June, and to be for filling up vacancies in the directors chosen by ballot, and for choosing acting guardians; after which the acting guardians were at such meetings to choose six persons from among themselves, who, with the directors, were to audit the accounts, and to choose a treasurer and clerk; and they were thereby authorized and required to transact and do all other business to be done at such quarterly meetings respectively, in pursuance of that act. By an act of the 5 Geo. IV. c. xviii., for altering and enlarging the power of the recited act, the provisions in the 18 Geo. III. c. 35, respecting apprenticeships were repealed, and re-enacted with a clause enabling the directors and guardians, present at any meeting held in pursuance of the 18 Geo. III., to bind poor children by indentures under the common seal of the corporation. A quarterly meeting of the directors and acting guardians being duly held under the directions of the act, 18 Geo. III., by an indenture bearing date the 1st day of October, 1821, it was witnessed that the directors and acting guardians of the poor within the hundred of Stow in the county of Suffolk, incorporated for the better relief and maintenance of the poor within the said hundred, by and with the consent of two justices for the said county whose names were subscribed, and in pursuance of an order of two justices of the said county therein also named, did put and place Thomas Rampling, a poor child belonging to the parish of Gipping, within the said hundred, and residing at and maintained in the house for the poor within the hundred, apprentice to Robert Steggall of Gipping, for the term of one year. To this indenture the common seal of the corporation was affixed at such meeting, but the indenture was not otherwise executed by the directors and acting guardians. It was executed by the master. The pauper served the year, sleeping in the parish of Gipping. The question was, whether or not this binding, previous to the statute 5 Geo. IV. c. xviii. was valid under the 18 Geo. III. c. 35. Denman, C. J. "The indenture was not executed in the name of the corporation, and is not their deed; and if executed in pursuance of the special power reserved by the 18 Geo. III. to the directors and acting guardians, it should have been signed and sealed by each of them. The binding was invalid." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. The name of the corporation is the Guardians of the Poor within the hundred of Stow. The binding parties to this indenture are the directors and acting guardians. They are in the nature of a committee of the corporation appointed for certain purposes." Parke, J. "The argument is, that the directors and acting guardians meant to act as the agents of the corporation. But, assuming that to be so, the corporation should have been the binding parties, and the indenture should have been their deed. That brings it to the question whether it is their deed, which again depends upon this, whether they are described as the binding parties by their true corporate name. Now the doctrine upon that subject, as established in the case of the Mayor and Burgesses of Lynn, and recognized in that of the Croydon Hospital v. Farley, is, that in grants or conveyances the name of a corporation must be the same in substance with the true name, but need not be the same in words or syllables. Applying that rule to the present case, it seems to me that 'the directors and acting guardians of the poor' is not in substance the same name as 'the guardians of the poor.' That being so, the binding, not being by the corporation, is invalid." Order of sessions confirmed.

Where a local act incorporated certain proprietors by the name of "guardians of the poor" with directions for appointing directors and acting guardians, who were empowered to bind out poor children apprentices:—Held, that a binding by the directors and acting guardians under the corporation seal was held to be invalid as a corporate act, not being executed by the true corporate name.

Where a premium is given, the indenture must be stamped within the times

Page 496.—After Rex v. Preston, insert Rex v. Church Hulme, 5 B. & Ad. 1029, n. (b). On appeal against an order of two justices, whereby Thomas Longstaff, and his wife and two children, were removed from Church Hulme to Nether Knutsford in the county of Chester, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court on a case, by which it appeared that the pauper, by indenture of the 30th September, 1820, bound himself, with the consent and approbation of his father, to serve Peter Orme, then residing in the appellant township, as an apprentice, for five years; and Peter Orme, in consideration of the sum of 10*l.*, which was given with the apprentice, covenanted to instruct him, &c. Under this indenture, which was duly executed by all the proper parties, the pauper served his master in the appellant township upwards of three years. The indenture was not stamped until after the order was made for the removal of the pauper and within a few days of the sessions, when it was stamped at the instance of the inhabitants of the respondent township, and not of any of the parties to the indenture, though they were living. The sessions, on production of the indenture, finding that it had been stamped with the proper duty stamp required by 55 Geo. III. c. 184, sch. A., part I., (viz. 1*l.*), upon payment of a penalty of 5*l.*, within a few days before the trial of the appeal, quashed the order. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Chipping Norton. That case went on the ground that the provisions of the stat. 8 Ann. c. 9, were in force, and therefore that an indenture of apprenticeship must be stamped with the premium stamp, within the time required by that statute. That case is decisive of the present, if the provisions of the stat. 9 Ann. still continue in force. Now, it has not been shown that they are repealed; on the contrary, it appears that the legislature, in the statutes repealing duties previously imposed, has studiously retained all the provisions, clauses, regulations, directions, &c. contained in the several acts relating to the duties repealed. That being so, no settlement was gained by the pauper in Knutsford. The order of sessions must be confirmed." Littleton, J., "I think the provisions in question are continued by 55 Geo. III. c. 184, s. 8., as well as by the preceding acts." Parke, J. "The respondents were bound to show either that the decision in Rex v. Chipping Norton was wrong, or that the provisions in question in stat. 8 Ann. c. 9, had been repealed by some act since 44 Geo. III. c. 98. It appears to me that neither can be done." Taunton, J., concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Ide, 2 B. & Ad. 866. Upon an appeal against an order of two justices, whereby John Stroude was removed from the parish of Hennock, in the county of Devon, to the parish of Ide, in the same county, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench on the following case:—By indenture, bearing date the 25th of April, 1817, made in pursuance of a previous order of two justices, and in conformity to the provisions of the stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, the pauper, John Stroude, was bound apprentice by the overseers of Ide, to Ambrose Badcock, of the same parish. By an assignment, dated the 2d of May, 1817, made pursuant to the provisions of the 32 Geo. III. c. 57, and in the form prescribed by the schedule to that act, and with the consent of two justices, as directed by the statute, the apprentice was assigned by Ambrose Badcock to James Long, of the parish of Hennock, and lived with Long in that parish, in service under the assignment, a sufficient length of time to gain a settlement. The assignment was executed by Badcock and Long, and the two justices; and at the time of the production of it in court on the hearing of the appeal, it bore a 1*l.* stamp, which had been affixed on payment of the penalty a short time before, and more than six months after the date and making of it. Badcock paid Long 5*l.* as the consideration of this transfer of the apprentice to him; but this was not set out in the assignment, nor was any mention made of it therein. And on this account it was contended by the respondent parish (Hennock) that no settlement could be gained under it; and the question for the opinion of the court was, whether the pauper had gained a settlement by his residence and service under this assignment. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that this instrument was sufficiently stamped, and in due time. It is said that the assignment is within the meaning and provisions of the statute of Anne, whereby it is required that the premium paid on the indenture of apprenticeship shall be truly set forth in the instrument; and here the sum paid by the new master to the old is not set out. Therefore the question arises whether an assignment of an indenture of an apprentice is within that statute. Now, it has been often held that acts which impose a charge on the subject must be construed strictly. The stamp acts, therefore, cannot apply to instruments not specifically designated therein, and hence the modern stamp acts are framed so elaborately to comprehend all possible cases. Unless, therefore, the assignment of an apprentice be distinctly intended in the statute of Anne, we cannot hold it to be subject to the duties there imposed. But every word there manifestly applies itself to the original instrument only, and not to a subsequent assignment. Under the late stamp acts, the indenture of apprenticeship, and an assignment thereof, are treated separately, and are made subject to separate duties, which clearly shows that the legislature thought the latter would not be included under the terms used in the statute of Anne. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Parke, J. "Considering the strict construction that ought to be put on a statute which imposes duties upon the subject, I think an assignment of this kind cannot be looked upon as included in the statute of Anne." Taunton and Patteson, Justices, concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Assignment of a parish apprentice held not to be within 8 Anne, c. 9; and therefore it need not be stamped within two months, nor need the consideration for it be set out.

The master of a parish apprentice being abroad, his steward assigned the apprentice by writing signed A. (the master), by J. P. his steward. J. P. had no special authority for this purpose; but the expense of this and of former similar assignments had been allowed in J. P.'s accounts with A.: Held, that the assignment was bad, as the master ought to exercise a discretion as to making an assignment, and, at all events, to execute a special authority for the making of it by another person. But quære, whether the assignment must not be executed by the master himself. Quære also, whether a parish apprentice can be bound to a person residing abroad, though occupying land in the parish.

Page 493.—After R. v. Gravesend, insert R. v. Spreyton, 3 B. & Ad. 818. On appeal against an order of two justices removing Josiah Lee from the parish of Spreyton, in the county of Devon, to the parish of Powderham, in the same county, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court of K. B. on the following case:—On the 2d of Oct. 1818, an order was made by two justices of the county of Devon, under the stat. 56 G. III. c. 139, for binding the pauper, a poor child of the parish of Powderham, apprentice to Lord Viscount Courtenay, described in the order as of Powderham in the said county, and on the following day the pauper was bound accordingly, in the usual form, by indenture referring to the above order, with the allowance of the two justices, to be instructed in husbandry work. The indenture was executed by the churchwardens and overseers of Powderham, but not by Lord Courtenay. At the time of the binding, Lord Courtenay was in a foreign country, where he had been residing some years, and has continued to reside ever since: but during all that time he kept in his own hands the mansion called Powderham Castle, and an estate of between 200 and 300 acres, all within the parish of Powderham. This property was under the care of Mr. John Pidsley, Lord Courtenay's steward, who, as the general agent of Lord Courtenay, conducted all his affairs at Powderham, but acted under no power of attorney or written instructions. When the pauper was bound as above mentioned, the steward accepted him as Lord Courtenay's apprentice, and, intending to assign him to a new master, agreed with his mother to take care of him in the parish of Powderham till he could get a place for him, and allowed her a weekly sum for his maintenance. Some time afterwards Mr. Pidsley agreed with one Richard Paddon, living in the parish of Spreyton, that Paddon, in consideration of 5*l.*, should take an assignment of the apprentice; and accordingly, in January, 1820, a written instrument bearing a stamp of 1*l.* was drawn up, by which, after reciting the execution of the indenture, it was stated that Lord Viscount Courtenay, with the consent and approbation of two justices for the county of Devon, did thereby assign the apprentice to Paddon, to serve him during the residue of the term of apprenticeship; and that Paddon, in consideration of the said sum of 5*l.*, agreed to accept and take the apprentice during the residue of the term, and acknowledged himself, his executors, &c. bound by the agreements and covenants mentioned in the indenture on the part of Lord Courtenay to be performed, agreeably to the statute, &c. The instrument was signed "Lord Viscount Courtenay, by John Pidsley his steward. Richard Paddon." The consent of the two justices was added, and subscribed with their names. Mr. Pidsley had no special authority, either written or verbal, to assign apprentices in general, or to sign this instrument for Lord Courtenay, but did it only by virtue of his general agency. He had on several occasions received parish apprentices on behalf of Lord Courtenay, had expended sums for their maintenance, and had paid money on the assignment of them to other masters (which assignments were executed in the same manner as the present), and these sums were always allowed him on the annual settlement of his accounts with Lord Courtenay. The 5*l.* which he paid to Paddon on this occasion was in like manner allowed. The pauper served the remainder of his term with Paddon in Spreyton. The questions for this court were, first, whether the original binding was valid; secondly, whether the assignment was valid. The case was argued on a former day of the term. Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court. After stating the facts, his lordship proceeded as follows: "Two objections were relied upon by the respondents; first, that the original binding of the apprentice to Lord Courtenay, then residing abroad, was invalid; and, secondly, that the assignment was also invalid. It is unnecessary to decide the first point, as we are all of opinion that the assignment was bad. The statute 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 7, enacts, 'that it shall and may be lawful for any master or mistress of any such parish apprentice as aforesaid, by indorsement on the indenture of apprenticeship, or by other instrument in writing, by and with the consent of two justices of the peace of the county, &c. where such master or mistress shall dwell, testified by such justices under their hands, to assign such apprentice to any person who is willing to take such apprentice for the residue of the term mentioned in such indenture of apprenticeship:' provided that the person to whom the apprentice is to be assigned, shall at the same time, 'by indorsement on the counterpart of such indenture, or by writing under his or her hand, stating the said indenture of apprenticeship, and the indorsement and consent aforesaid, declare his or her acceptance of such apprentice,' and acknowledge himself, herself, &c. bound by the covenants on the part of the master or mistress to be performed. It is not expressly said, that the master assigning the apprentice shall himself sign the instrument; but I do not see how it could be valid unless he did, and the form given in schedule (D.) purports to be so signed. But assuming that a person duly authorized by the master might execute the assignment, we think that in this case no sufficient authority is shown. The master ought, at all events, to exercise his own discretion as to the making of the assignment. Here no discretion was exercised on his part. There is no proof of any direction given by him: it only appears, that after the assignment was made, he allowed the expenses of it in his steward's account. We think that is not equivalent to a distinct authority from Lord Courtenay to the steward to execute this instrument for him. No settlement, therefore, was gained by the service in Spreyton; and whether the original binding was valid or not, the pauper's settlement is in the parish of Powderham, to which he belonged before the binding, and in which he was bound." Order of sessions quashed.

Page 517.—After Rex v. St. Margaret's King's Lynn, insert Rex v. Ightham, 6 Nev. & Man. 320. Order of removal from Ightham to Sunbridge was quashed upon appeal. Case:—The respondents proved a settlement by birth in Ightham. The appellants set up a subsequent settlement in Sunbridge, under the following circumstances:—William Webb, the brother of the pauper John Webb, worked with William Wright, a carpenter, residing at Ightham, for three years, under a verbal contract of apprenticeship, and in 1804, when the pauper was about twenty years old, applied to Wright to take the pauper in his place. Wright answered "no," that he would take no more three-years' apprentices unless they would agree to work on his land as well as at the carpentry business. "I will have no more apprentices for three years, unless he is agreeable to do other work as well; I will take him to do work as a servant." Wright occupied three acres of hop ground. William Webb assented, and it was agreed that the pauper should live with Wright for three years, to learn the business of a carpenter, and do any other work he required him to do; to be paid for the first year 9*s.* a week, the second 10*s.*, and for the third 11*s.*; and if the pauper did any over-work, he was to be paid for it in addition, according to his rate of wages at the time. Wright added, that the pauper might have Sunday to himself if he asked leave. The pauper entered Wright's service in pursuance of this

A., a carpenter and occupier of land, is applied to by B., who wishes to succeed C. as an apprentice to A. A. says he will take no more apprentices, unless they will work on the land as well as at the trade, and that he will take him to do work as a servant. It is agreed that B. shall live with A. three years, to learn the business of a carpenter, and to do any other work that shall be required by A., who is to pay him certain weekly wages, and also for overwork.

The question, whether this agreement constituted a contract of apprenticeship or of hiring and service, ought to be decided by the sessions. But where the sessions, having decided that it is a contract of hiring and service, granted a special case, the court, upon the facts found as above, reversed their decision, holding that the agreement was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship.

agreement, and served the three years, boarding and lodging at his own expense with a journeyman. Lord Denman, C. J. "This, in my opinion, is a defective contract of apprenticeship. The pauper was to live with Wright three years, to learn the business of a carpenter, and do any other work he required him to do. I think the master might have been sued for not teaching the pauper the business of a carpenter." Littledale, J. "The pauper was the brother of a former apprentice: the master says I will have no more apprentices for three years, unless he is agreeable to do other work as well;—I will take him to do work as a servant. The question then is, whether the working as a servant was subsidiary to the apprenticeship. The brother assented to what the master said, and it was agreed that the pauper should live with the master for three years, to learn the business of a carpenter, and do any other work he required him to do, for which he was to be paid. It is not unusual for a master to pay his apprentice. Upon the whole, this must be taken to be a contract of apprenticeship." Patteson, J. "I think this is an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. It appears that on the first application by the pauper's brother, the master said he would take no more apprentices unless they would work on the land as well as at the carpentry business;—and the pauper, as I understand the case, subsequently consented to work as a servant as well as an apprentice. The pauper's object, however, was to learn and the master undertook to take him as a servant and teach him the business of a carpenter." Coleridge, J. "This case should not have come here. The sessions should have found whether this was a contract of hiring and service, or a defective apprenticeship. In Rex v. Great Wishford there was evidence to support the finding of the sessions. I agree with the rest of the court, and I would remark, that it would be better if counsel did not press for a case on questions of this description." Order of sessions quashed.

A pauper rented a windmill and a brick built cottage and garden, at the rent of 30*l.* per annum, for six years, and during that time held and occupied the same, and actually paid that rent, and was rated to and paid the rates for the relief of the poor. The cottage and garden, with the mill, were together of more than the annual value of 10*l.*, but exclusive of the mill they were not of that annual value. The mill was of wood, and had a foundation of brick; but the wood work was not inserted in the brick foundation, but rested upon it by its own weight alone. No part of the machinery of the mill touched the ground or any part of the foundation: Held, that the windmill not being affixed to the freehold, nor to any thing connected with it, was not parcel of a tenement, and consequently that the pauper gained no settlement.

Page 641.—After Rex v. Whitechapel insert Rex v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161. Upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby Samuel Stammers and his four children were removed from the parish of St. Mary, Lambeth, in the county of Surrey, to the parish of Otley, in the county of Suffolk, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this court on the following case:—Samuel Stammers, the pauper, rented of James Bedwell, of Ipswich, carpenter, in the appellant parish, a windmill called a smock mill, a brick built cottage, and a small garden, at the rent of 30*l.* per annum, during the space of six years and three quarters of another year, ending Midsummer, 1827; and during the whole of that time held, occupied, and actually paid for the same the said sum of 30*l.* per annum, and was rated to and paid several rates for the relief of the poor of the parish of Otley in respect of the cottage and garden, and also of the mill, at the estimated value of 6*l.* per annum. The cottage and garden, with the mill, are together of more than the annual value of 10*l.*, but the cottage and garden, exclusively of the mill, are not of that annual value. The mill is of a circular form, and of wood, having a foundation of brick twelve inches high from the ground, in which the wood work is not inserted, but rests upon it by its own weight alone. No part of the machinery of the mill touches the ground or any part of the foundation; the whole is confined to the wooden part of it, which has two floors; but on the ground within the brick foundation, planks are laid down so as to form a flooring, and the mill would work as well upon the ground as upon the brick foundation. Some time after the erection of the mill, the tenant placed mortar on the inside and outside of the cill or bottom part of the wood work of the mill, for the purpose of excluding the weather, mortar so placed not acting as a cement between wood and brick work; and he also fixed posts in the ground, which sloping towards the mill, supported steps by which the mill was entered. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the mill in question was a tenement by the renting of which the pauper could acquire a settlement in Otley. Bayley, J. "The question is, whether the mill be a parcel of the tenement. To be so, it must be part and parcel of the freehold. Now it is not parcel of the freehold unless it be affixed to it, or to something previously connected with it. Here the mill was not affixed to the land, but merely rested on a foundation of brick. The sessions have found that if it had stood upon the ground, it would have worked as well. If it had, the only difference would have been, that it probably would have rotted. This is analogous to the case of a barn set upon pillars; and that is nothing more than a chattel. The windmill in this case would clearly have gone to the executor, and not to the heir." Littledale, J. "This is precisely within the case of Rex v. The Inhabitants of Londonthorpe (6 T. R. 377.) It is attempted to be distinguished, because the tenant in that case had permission from the landlord to put up the mill, and it was treated by both as a chattel; but that circumstance can make no difference. Suppose there were two mills in two distinct townships, and one of the townships treated the mill as a tenement, and the other as a mere chattel. That would make no difference. It must depend upon the nature of the building, and not upon the mode of treating it, whether it be a tenement or not." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. To constitute a tenement, it is necessary that the structure should be affixed to the soil, or to something annexed to the soil. Here the windmill rested merely upon the brick foundation, without being annexed to it by cement." Order of sessions quashed.

Page 906.—After Rex v. Binegar add Rex v. St. John Delpike, 2 B. & Ad. 226. Upon an appeal against an order of two justices, whereby Mary Laycock was removed from St. Mary Castlegate, in the city of York, to the parish of St. John Delpike, in the same city, the court of quarter sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of K. B. on the following case:—In the year 1808, the pauper not then being a widow, and being under the age of twenty-one years, intermarried with one James Laycock. This marriage was solemnized by license in the parish church of St. Lawrence, in the city of York, without the consent of the pauper's father, who was then living. She continued to live with James Laycock as his wife till 1825, when she intermarried with one Thomas Laycock, the said James Laycock then and still being alive. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the former marriage with James Laycock was or was not valid: if it were declared valid, then the order of sessions was to be quashed; if invalid, then to be affirmed. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We must construe the proviso in the third section as intended to apply to cases which occurred before the passing of the 3 Geo. IV. c. 75. Section 2 applies to marriages which, under certain circumstances, were rendered invalid by the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, and which are by that section rendered valid in cases where the parties shall have continued to live together as husband and wife till the death of one of them, or till the passing of that act. The provision in section 3, that "the act shall not extend to render valid any marriage where either of the parties shall at any time afterwards during the life of the other party have lawfully intermarried with any other person," may have been wholly unnecessary. At the same time it may possibly have occurred to those who framed the act that it might occasionally happen, that one of the two parties to the first marriage might, during the life of the other, have lawfully intermarried with a third, and might afterwards have cohabited again with the original husband or wife, till the death of one, or the passing of the act. I think, however, that clause was introduced only for greater caution, and that we ought not to construe the act so that a marriage may first be treated as valid, and afterwards as invalid. The first marriage, therefore, was valid: and consequently the order of sessions must be quashed." Littledale, J. "The second section renders valid marriages which, by the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, would be void. I think the words of that and the following section are, in their natural construction, retrospective. And without express words to a contrary effect, we could not say that the validity given by this act to marriages was intended to be shifting and uncertain. The proviso in the third section, that 'the act shall not extend to render valid any marriage declared invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction before the passing of that act, nor any marriage where either of the parties shall at any time

A marriage void by s. 11, of 26 G. 2, c. 33 (Marriage Act), but made valid by s. 2, of 3 G. 4, c. 75, shall not subsequently be rendered invalid by the marriage of either of the parties during the life of the other with a third party.

afterwards, during the life of the other party, have lawfully intermarried with any other person,' seems to contemplate cases not very likely to happen in conjunction with the circumstances pointed out in the second section. But such cases are possible. Parties might continue to cohabit, yet friends might choose to render the marriage invalid. So the parties to the original marriage might cohabit together, though one had been lawfully married in the mean time to another. But if there could be a floating shifting validity, the consequence might be, that children might be legitimate one day and not another; and it appears to me that this is not contemplated by the act." Parke, J. "I think this is a very clear case. The second section renders valid marriages otherwise invalid by the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, in cases where the parties shall have continued to live together as husband and wife till the death of one of them, or till the passing of that act. Under that section, therefore, the first marriage would be valid; because here the parties did continue to live together till the passing of the act. Then, the third section enacts, that the act shall not render valid any marriage where one of the parties shall, during the other's life, have lawfully intermarried with any other person. It is said that this clause is prospective. If it be retrospective only, there can be no question in the case. If it be prospective, this absurdity will follow,—that parties, whose marriage is rendered valid by the second section, may at any time they please bastardize their issue by contracting a subsequent marriage. Such a construction ought not to be given to the words of the act, unless it be absolutely necessary. But then it is said that if the construction be retrospective only, this clause is useless. That would not be a sufficient reason for so absurd a construction as that contended for by the respondent parish: but in truth, the clause is not altogether useless; for two parties may be living together, and yet one have married another person; and this case is provided for by the last part of the third section. The argument assumes that a party cannot commit bigamy, without ceasing to live with his first wife. A man may have continued to cohabit with his first wife till the passing of the act, or the death of one of the parties, and yet have contracted another and a valid marriage in the mean time." Patteson, J. "I think the original marriage was rendered valid by the second section, and that the third section has a retrospective operation only; and, therefore, that the marriage of the pauper to Thomas Laycock after the passing of the act does not take the case out of the second section." Order of sessions quashed.

The court refused a mandamus to the sessions to state a special case, though it appeared that a case had been granted, as the decision of the sessions upon the facts precluded any question of law.

Page 921, after Rex v. Preston on the Hill, insert Rex v. Justices of Pembrokeshire, 2 B. & Ad. 391. On a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices of Pembrokeshire to state a special case for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, pursuant to an order of sessions made on hearing an appeal against an order of removal from Narberth to Llanboidy, and to return the case so stated into the said court, it appeared by the affidavits in support of the rule, that the appeal came on to be tried at the Midsummer quarter sessions for Pembrokeshire, in 1830, when, after hearing contradictory evidence on behalf of the two parties on a question of settlement by renting a tenement, the court confirmed the order; but, being requested to grant a case, did so in general terms, and without reference to any specific point. The attorneys could not agree in drawing up a case; and, upon their waiting on the chairman in order that he might settle the statements they had prepared, he said he could not sign any case by which it should not appear that the court had decided in favour of the respondents on the facts, independent of the law. The appellants' attorney declined taking a case so stated. It appeared by the affidavits against the rule, that the question of law which the appellants wished to bring before the court regarded the effect of a supposed agreement between the pauper and the landlord of the tenement, that certain repairs to be done by the pauper (and which it was alleged he had afterwards done) should be allowed in lieu of rent: but it seemed that the justices at sessions, although they granted the case, had been of opinion, upon the evidence, that the agreement had not been made, nor the repairs done; and the chairman would not sign any statement to a different effect. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The justices have confirmed the order, subject to a case. That is no confirmation, unless a case be stated. All we can do, under the circumstances, is to require them to enter continuances, and hear the appeal. I do not see how we can order them to state a case." The rest of the court concurred. Rule discharged. On a subsequent day in the term, Rex v. Earl of Effingham (determined in Hilary Term, 1782,) was mentioned, from a note taken by the late Mr. Dealtry, and in which the court granted a mandamus to the justices present at the last Bradford (West Riding of Yorkshire) sessions, to state a case. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I admit that there may be instances in which such a mandamus may issue; but not that it ought to go upon the present application. Here the case, if stated, could come to nothing. The facts are for the judgment of the sessions; and, under the circumstances disclosed, it would evidently be useless to call upon them for a case."

Rex v. Earl of Effingham and others, 2 B. & Ad. 393, n. Motion by Mr. J. P. Heywood for a mandamus to the Earl of Effingham, Henry Wickham, esq., Henry Wood, D.D., Henry Zouch, clerk, Pemberton Milnes, esq., Sir Watts Horton, bart., and Joshua Horton, esq., justices, &c. of the West Riding of Yorkshire, commanding them to state a special case on an appeal between the inhabitants of Northowram and the inhabitants of Hipperholme, determined by them at sessions, 13th of July last; on affidavit that, the order being affirmed, the appellants desired a special case to be stated, which the sessions unanimously consented to; and the counsel for the appellants drew the case; and in the afternoon both counsel tendered the case to the sessions for their approbation. Mr. Wickham and Mr. Horton, who joined in making the original order, and Sir Watts Horton, who had an estate in each parish, and therefore declined giving any opinion in the morning, were the only justices remaining, when Sir W. H. refused to permit the case to be stated; and he being joined by Mr. Horton, no case was stated. Lord Mansfield doubted whether a mandamus could go to compel justices to state a case; but Mr. Justice Buller saying that in this instance the court of quarter sessions had actually agreed to state one, but Sir W. H. prevented it, a rule nisi was granted. Mr. Fearnley and Mr. Dunning (in Hilary Term, 1782) showed cause, on affidavits, in which it was represented that the case had not been regularly granted, but that some of the justices had said a case might be stated if counsel could agree upon one; that counsel had not agreed, and that no directions for a case had been given to the clerk of the peace. The Attorney-General and Mr. Heywood in reply, said that the case had been properly granted, and that the justices were willing that it should be stated; and the Attorney-General mentioned that an instance had occurred in which a mandamus had been granted, when the respondents would not consent to the stating of a case. Lord Mansfield ordered the case annexed to the affidavits in support of the rule to be read; and, it being read, asked Mr. Fearnley what facts in the case he could controvert? Mr. Fearnley said he had not seen the case at the sessions, and was not prepared now to go into the truth of the facts. Mr. Heywood observed, that though the case was annexed to Mr. Parker's affidavit, none of the justices showing cause had denied any fact in it. Lord Mansfield said there had been a misunderstanding; there did not seem to be any contrariety of facts, and the mandamus must go. Mr. Fearnley asked whether the justices must re-examine the witnesses? Lord Mansfield, "They must do it in order to know what case to return, if there is a difference about the facts." In Easter Term, 1782, a return was made, stating a special case, and stating also that the sessions had discharged the order of two justices; and a rule nisi was obtained for affirming this last-mentioned order of sessions; which rule was afterwards made absolute, no cause being shown.

Aliter where the decision of the sessions as to a case had been defeated by some misunderstanding.

Page 890.—Rex v. Holbeach, Mich. T. 1836. The pauper stated in his examination, that he contracted to serve S. Boston for a year, and served it. If the appellant specifies a par-particular ground of objection to a hiring, he will be confined to that in the appeal.

Addenda.

Although the examination discloses an imperfect settlement, the respondents may give evidence of it.

In the statement of the grounds of appeal, the appellant said "that the pauper did not contract with S. Boston as mentioned in the examination, but that before any earnest was paid, or the contract completed, the pauper stipulated that he should have two days' holiday at Spalding fair in July, and that he went accordingly." Upon the trial of the appeal, proof was given that the pauper stipulated for Holbeach fair for one day, which he had. The Court of King's Bench were of opinion that this statement of the ground of appeal was insufficient, as it was calculated to mislead the respondents. (a)

Rex v. Kelvedon, Mich. T. 1836. The pauper, in his examination upon which the order of removal was made, stated, "I was born at Kelvedon, where my father resided; but he belonged to Costlemark, and continued to belong there till he died, as I have heard. I have heard him say he was a certificated man." At the sessions the respondents proceeded to prove the settlement of the father at Costlemark; but the sessions refused to hear it, as the examination did not disclose any settlement, and the respondents were limited to the grounds of removal stated in such examination. Per curiam: "The evidence of a settlement in the examination is very loose, and the justices ought not probably to have made an order of removal upon it; but as they have done so, the respondents have done all that the legislature has required them, by sending a copy of the examination. The appellants, by their statement of the grounds of appeal, evidently understand the word 'belonging' as meaning 'settled there;'" and the case was sent back to the sessions to be heard.

(a) A general statement would, according to Rex v. Justices of Cornwall, ante, 892, have been sufficient.

I. OF STATUTES.

4 & 5 WILL. IV. CAP. 76.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales. [14th August, 1834.]

WHEREAS it is expedient to alter and amend the laws relating to the relief of poor persons in England and Wales: Be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his heirs and successors, by warrant under the royal sign manual, to appoint three fit persons to be commissioners to carry this act into execution, and also from time to time, at pleasure, to remove any of the commissioners for the time being, and upon every or any vacancy in the said number of commissioners, either by removal or by death or otherwise, to appoint some other fit person to the said office; and until such appointment, it shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing commissioners or commissioner to act as if no such vacancy had occurred.

Appointment and removal of commissioners.

2. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall be styled "The Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales;" and the said commissioners, or any two of them, may sit from time to time, as they deem expedient, as a board of commissioners for carrying this act into execution; and the said commissioners acting as such board shall be and are hereby empowered, by summons under their hands and seal, to require the attendance of all such persons as they may think fit to call before them upon any question or matter connected with or relating to the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and also to make any inquiries and require any answer or returns as to any such question or matter, and also to administer oaths, and examine all such persons upon oath, and to require and enforce the production upon oath of books, contracts, agreements, accounts, and writings, or copies thereof respectively, in anywise relating to any such question or matter; or, in lieu of requiring such oath as aforesaid, the said commissioners may, if they think fit, require any such person to make and subscribe a declaration of the truth of the matters respecting which he shall have been or shall be so examined: provided always, that no such person shall be required, in obedience to any such summons, to go or travel more than ten miles from the place of his abode; provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be deemed to extend to authorize or empower the said commissioners to act as a court of record, or to require the production of the title, or of any papers or writings relating to the title, of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, not being the property of any parish or union.

Style of commissioners; who may sit as a board, with power to summon and examine witnesses, and call for production of papers, on oath;

or to substitute a declaration for an oath;

but not to inquire into any title.

3. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall cause to be made a seal of the said board, and shall cause to be sealed or stamped therewith all rules, orders, and regulations made by the said commissioners in pursuance of this act; and all such rules, orders, and regulations, or copies thereof, purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the said board, shall be received as evidence of the same respectively, without any further proof thereof; and no such rule, order, or regulation, or copy thereof, shall be valid, or have any force or effect, unless the same shall be so sealed or stamped as aforesaid.

To have a common seal.

Rules, &c. purporting to be sealed with such seal to be received as evidence.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Commissioners to record their proceedings.

Commissioners to make a general report to the secretary of state yearly;

and to report proceedings to secretary of state when required.

Power to appoint assistant commissioners;

and to remove same.

Not more than nine to be appointed, without consent of Treasury.

Commissioners not to sit in parliament.

Commissioners to appoint secretary, assistant secretary or secretaries, clerks, and other officers.

Appointment of commissioners, &c. limited to five years.

Commissioners and assistant commissioners to take oath.

Form of oath.

Notification of appointment of commissioners to

4. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall make a record of their proceedings, in which shall be entered in writing a reference to every letter received, from whence, its date, the date of its reception, and the subject to which it relates, and a minute of every letter written or order given by the said commissioners, whether in answer to such letters received or otherwise, with the date of the same, and a minute of the opinion of each of the members of the board of commissioners, in case they should finally differ in opinion upon any order to be given or other proceeding of the board; and such record shall be submitted to one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state once in every year, or as often as he shall require the same.

5. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall, once in every year, submit to one of the principal secretaries of state a general report of their proceedings; and every such general report shall be laid before both houses of parliament within six weeks after the receipt of the same by such principal secretary of state, if parliament be then sitting, or if parliament be not sitting then within six weeks after the next meeting thereof.

6. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall from time to time, at such times as any one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state shall direct, give to the principal secretary of state requiring the same such information respecting their proceedings, or any part thereof, as the said principal secretary of state shall require.

7. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall and they are hereby empowered from time to time to appoint such persons as they may think fit, to be assistant commissioners for carrying this act into execution, at such places and in such manner as the said commissioners may direct, and to remove such assistant commissioners, or any of them, at their discretion, and on every or any vacancy in the said office of assistant commissioner, by removal or by death or otherwise, to appoint, if they see fit, some other person to the said office: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the said commissioners to appoint more than nine such assistant commissioners to act at any one time, unless the lord high treasurer, or the commissioners of his Majesty's treasury for the time being, or any three or more of them, shall consent to the appointment of a greater number.

8. And be it further enacted, that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, appointed as aforesaid, shall, during his continuance in such appointment, be capable of being elected or sitting as a member of the House of Commons.

9. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners may and they are hereby empowered from time to time to appoint a secretary, assistant secretary or secretaries, and all such clerks, messengers, and officers as they shall deem necessary, and from time to time, at the discretion of the said commissioners, to remove such secretary, assistant secretary or secretaries, clerks, messengers, and officers, or any of them, and to appoint others in their stead: provided always, that the amount of the salaries of such secretary, assistant secretary or secretaries, clerks, messengers, and officers, shall from time to time be regulated by the lord high treasurer, or the commissioners of his Majesty's treasury, or any three or more of them.

10. And be it further enacted, that no commissioner to be appointed by his Majesty, nor any assistant commissioner, secretary, or other officer or person to be appointed by the said commissioners, under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall continue to hold his respective office, or exercise any of the powers given by this act, for a longer period than five years next after the day of the passing of this act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of parliament; and from and after the expiration of the said period of five years, and of the then next session of parliament, so much of this act as enables his Majesty to appoint any commissioner or commissioners, shall cease to operate or have any effect whatever.

11. And be it further enacted, that every commissioner and assistant commissioner to be appointed from time to time as aforesaid, shall, before he shall enter upon the execution of his office, take the following oath, before one of the judges of his Majesty's Courts of King's Bench or Common Pleas, or one of the barons of the Court of Exchequer; (that is to say,)

"I, A. B., do swear, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my skill and judgment, execute and fulfil all the powers and duties of a commissioner [or assistant commissioner, as the case may be,] under an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled [here set forth the title of this act]."

And the appointment of every such commissioner and assistant commissioner, together with the time when and the judge or baron before whom he shall have taken the oath aforesaid, shall be forthwith published in the London Gazette; and a notification of such appointment and of the taking of such oath shall from time to time be sent, under the hands and seal of the said commissioners, to the clerk of the peace of every county in England and Wales, who shall and is hereby required as soon as conveniently may be to cause the same to be advertized once in some newspaper published or circulated in such county; and such notification as aforesaid shall be kept and preserved by such clerk of the peace with the records of such county.

12. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to delegate to their assistant commissioners, or to any of them, such of the powers and authorities hereby given to the said commissioners (except the powers to make general rules) as the said commissioners shall think fit; and the powers and authorities so delegated, and the delegation thereof, shall be notified in such manner, and such powers and authorities shall be exercised at such places, for such periods, and under such circumstances, and subject to such regulations, as the said commissioners shall direct; and the said commissioners may at any time revoke, recall, alter, or vary all or any of the powers and authorities which shall be so delegated as aforesaid; and, notwithstanding the delegation thereof, may act as if no such delegation had been made; and the said assistant commissioners may and are hereby empowered to summon before them such persons as they may think necessary for the purpose of being examined upon oath (which oath such assistant commissioners are hereby empowered to administer) upon any question or matter relating to the poor or their relief, or for the purpose of producing and verifying upon oath any books, contracts, agreements, accounts, and writings, or copies of the same, in anywise relating to such question or matter, and not relating to or involving any question of title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments not being the property of any parish or union, as such assistant commissioners may think fit, but so that no such person shall be required, in obedience to any such summons, to go or travel more than ten miles from the place of his abode: provided, nevertheless, that in lieu of requiring such oath as aforesaid the said assistant commissioners may, if they think fit, require such person to make and subscribe a declaration of the truth of the matters respecting which he shall have been or shall be so examined; and all summonses and orders made by any such assistant commissioner in pursuance or exercise of such delegated powers and authorities, shall be obeyed, performed, and carried into effect by all persons, as if such summons or order had been the summons or order of the said commissioners, and the breach, non-observance, or non-performance thereof shall be punishable in like manner.

13. And be it further enacted, that if any person, upon any examination under the authority of this act, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and if any person shall make or subscribe a false declaration, he shall, on being convicted thereof, suffer the pains and penalties of perjury; and if any person shall wilfully refuse to attend, in obedience to any summons of any commissioner or assistant commissioner, or to give evidence, or shall wilfully alter, suppress, conceal, destroy, or refuse to produce any books, contracts, agreements, accounts, and writings, or copies of the same, which may be so required to be produced before the said commissioners or assistant commissioners, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

14. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, in any case where they see fit, to order and allow such expenses of witnesses, and of or attending the production of any books, contracts, agreements, accounts, or writings, or copies thereof, to or before the said commissioners or assistant commissioners, as such commissioners may deem reasonable, to be paid as follows: that is to say, out of the poor rates of the respective parish or union which in the opinion of the said commissioners shall be interested or concerned in such attendance or production respectively, in all cases in which such witnesses shall not go or travel more than ten miles from the respective parish or union which shall be interested or concerned as aforesaid; and in all other cases, the expenses so ordered or allowed shall be deemed as part of the incidental expenses attending the execution of this act, and be paid accordingly.

15. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the administration of relief to the poor throughout England and Wales, according to the existing laws, or such laws as shall be in force at the time being, shall be subject to the direction and control of the said commissioners; and for executing the powers given to them by this act, the said commissioners shall and are hereby authorized and required, from time to time as they shall see occasion, to make and issue all such rules, orders, and regulations for the management of the poor, for the government of workhouses, and the education of the children therein, and for the management of parish poor children under the provisions of an act made and passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better regulation of Parish Poor Children of the several Parishes therein mentioned within the Bills of Mortality," and the superintending, inspecting, and regulating of the houses wherein such poor children are kept and maintained, and for the apprenticing the children of poor persons, and for the guidance and control of all guardians, vestries, and parish officers, so far as relates to the management or relief of the poor, and the keeping, examining, auditing, and allowing of accounts, and making and entering into contracts in all matters relating to such management or relief, or to any expenditure for the relief of the poor, and for carrying this act into execution in all other respects, as they shall think proper: and the said commissioners may, at their discretion, from time to time suspend, alter, or rescind such rules, orders, and regulations, or any of them: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as enabling the said commissioners, or any of them, to interfere in any individual case for the purpose of ordering relief.

16. And be it further enacted, that no general rule of the said commissioners shall operate or take effect until the expiration of forty days after the same, or a copy thereof, shall have been sent, signed and sealed by the said commissioners, to one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state; and if at any time after any such general rule shall have been so sent to such principal secretary of state, his Majesty, with the advice of his privy council, shall disallow the same or any part thereof, such general rule or the part thereof so disallowed, shall not come into operation, if such disallowance be notified to the said commissioners at any time during the said period of forty days; but if such disallowance be made at any time after that period, such disallowance shall, by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, be notified to the said commissioners, and from and after such disallowance shall have been so notified, then such general rule, so far as the same shall have been so disallowed, shall cease to operate, subject however and without prejudice to all acts and transactions under or in virtue of the same previously to such disallowance having been so notified.

17. And be it further enacted, that all general rules for the time being in force at the commencement of every session of parliament, and which shall not previously have been submitted to parliament, shall from time to time, within one week after the commencement of every such session, be laid by one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state before both houses of parliament.

18. And be it further enacted, that a written or printed copy of every rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners shall, before the same shall come into operation in any parish or union, be sent by the said commissioners by the post, or in such manner as the commissioners shall think fit, sealed or stamped with their seal, addressed to the overseers of such parish, the guardians of such union or their clerk, and to the clerk to the justices of the petty sessions held for the division in which such parish or union shall be situate; and such overseers, guardians, or their clerk, and clerks to the justices aforesaid, are hereby required to keep and preserve, notify and give publicity to such rules, orders, and regulations, in such manner as the said commissioners shall direct, and also to allow every owner of property, or his agent, or any rate-payer, in every such parish or union, to inspect the same at all reasonable times, free of any charge for such inspection, and to furnish copies of the same, being paid for such copies at and after the rate of threepence for every folio of seventy-two words, and to allow copies or extracts thereof to be taken, on being paid for so doing after the rate of three halfpence for every folio of seventy-two words; and in case any such overseer, guardian, clerk, or clerk to the justices, to whom such rules, orders, or regulations, or copies thereof, shall be sent as aforesaid, shall neglect to keep and preserve, notify and give publicity to the same in the mode prescribed or directed by the said commissioners, or shall refuse such inspection, or to furnish or allow such copies thereof to be taken as aforesaid, every person so offending shall, for every such offence, be subject and liable to a penalty not exceeding the sum of ten pounds nor less than forty shillings, to be recoverable in the same manner as any penalties are by this act directed to be recovered: provided also, that if any such rule shall, after the same shall have come into operation, be disallowed in manner hereinbefore mentioned, or revoked by the said commissioners, then and in every such case the said commissioners shall send, by the post, or in such manner as they shall think fit, to every parish or union affected by the said rule, notice of such disallowance or revocation; such notice of disallowance or revocation to be addressed, kept, preserved, notified, and publicly inspected, and copies thereof furnished or allowed to be taken, in such and the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are hereinbefore mentioned respecting the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners. 4&5 IV. 4, c. 76.

19. And be it further enacted, that no rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners, nor any bye-laws at present in force or to be hereafter made, shall oblige any inmate of any workhouse to attend any religious service which may be celebrated in a mode contrary to the religious principles of such inmate, nor shall authorize the education of any child in such workhouse in any religious creed other than that professed by the parents or surviving parent of such child, and to which such parents or parent shall object, or, in the case of an orphan, to which the godfather or godmother of such orphan shall so object: provided also, that it shall and may be lawful for any licensed minister of the religious persuasion of any inmate of such workhouse, at all times in the day, on the request of such inmate, to visit such workhouse for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such inmate, and also for the purpose of instructing his child or children in the principles of their religion.

No inmate of a workhouse obliged to attend any religious service contrary to his religious principles, &c.

20. And be it further enacted, that no order or regulation made by any assistant commissioner shall be in force, unless and until the same shall have been adopted by the said commissioners, and sealed or stamped with their seal, and thereupon every such order or regulation shall be considered as made by the said commissioners: and that no rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners, except orders made in answer to the statements and reports hereinafter authorized to be made by overseers or guardians to the said commissioners, shall be in force, until the expiration of fourteen days after a written or printed copy of the same shall have been sent by the said commissioners, sealed or stamped and addressed as lastly hereinbefore is mentioned.

Orders or regulations of assistant commissioners to be approved and sealed by commissioners.

21. And be it further enacted, that, except where otherwise provided by this act, all the powers and authorities given in and by a certain act of parliament passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," and in and by a certain other act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his said late Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor" and all acts for amending such acts respectively, and also all the powers and authorities given by every other act of parliament, general as well as local, for or relating to the building, altering or enlarging of poorhouses and workhouses, and to the acquiring, purchasing, hiring, holding, selling, exchanging, and disposing thereof, or of land whereon the same may have been or may hereafter be erected, and of preparing such houses for the reception of poor persons, and the dieting, clothing, employing, and governing of such poor, and the raising or borrowing of money for any of the purposes aforesaid, and for repaying the same, and all powers of regulating and conducting all other workhouses whatsoever, and of governing, providing for, and employing the poor therein, and all powers auxiliary to any of the powers aforesaid, or in any way relating to the relief of the poor, shall in future be exercised by the persons authorized by law to exercise the same, under the control, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners; and the said commissioners and assistant commissioners respectively, and every of them, shall be entitled to attend at every parochial and other local board and vestry, and take part in the discussions, but not to vote at such board or vestry; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give the said commissioners or assistant commissioners any power to order the building, purchasing, hiring, altering, or enlarging of any workhouse, or the purchasing or hiring of any land at the charge or for the use of any parish or union, save and except so far as such powers are expressly given by this act.

Powers of 22 G. 3, c. 83, 59 G. 3, c. 12, and of all other acts relating to workhouses, and to borrowing money, to be exercised under control of commissioners, and be subject to their orders.

Commissioners, &c. to be entitled to attend local boards and vestry; but not to order the building or hiring of workhouses, except under limitations.

22. And whereas by the said act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, it is (among other things) enacted that the rules, orders, and regulations specified and contained in the schedule thereunto annexed, should be duly observed and enforced at every poorhouse or workhouse to be provided by virtue of the said act, with such additions as should be made by the justices of the peace of the limit wherein such house or houses should be situate, at some special session, provided that such additions should not be contradictory to the rules, orders, and regulations established by that act, and provided that the same should not be repealed by the justices at their quarter sessions of the peace; and it is expedient that such additions, or other rules, orders, or regulations, under that or any local or other act, should not in future be made without the sanction of the said commissioners: be it therefore enacted, that no additions or alterations shall hereafter be made to or in the rules, orders, and regulations contained in the schedule to the said recited act, and no rules, orders and regulations shall hereafter be made under the authority of the said recited act, or of any act made for altering, amending, or extending the same, or any local or other act relating to poorhouses, workhouses, or the relief of the poor, until the same shall have been submitted to and approved and confirmed by the said commissioners; and that the same, when so confirmed, shall be legally valid and binding upon all persons; and no justice or justices shall have power to repeal the same.

23. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby empowered, from time to time when they may see fit, by any writing under their hands and seal, by and with the consent in writing of a majority of the guardians of any union, or with the consent of a majority of the rate-payers and owners of property entitled to vote in manner hereinafter prescribed, in any parish, such last-mentioned majority to be ascertained in manner provided in and by this act, to order and direct the overseers or guardians of any parish or union not having a workhouse or workhouses, to build a workhouse or workhouses, and to purchase or hire land for the purpose of building the same thereon, or to purchase or hire a workhouse or workhouses, or any building or buildings for the purpose of being used as or converted into a workhouse or workhouses; and, with the like consent, to order and direct the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse or workhouses, or any buildings capable of being converted into a workhouse or workhouses, to enlarge or alter the same in such manner as the said commissioners shall deem most proper for carrying the provisions of this act into execution, or to build, hire, or purchase any additional workhouse or workhouses, or any building or buildings for the purpose of being used as or converted into a workhouse or workhouses, or to purchase or hire any land for building such additional workhouse or workhouses thereon, of such size and description, and according to such plan, and in such manner as the said commissioners shall deem most proper for carrying the provisions of this act into execution; and the overseers and guardians, to whom any such order shall be directed, are hereby authorized and required to assess, raise, and levy such sum or sums of money as may be necessary for the purposes specified in such order, by such powers, ways, and means as are now by law given to or vested in churchwardens and overseers or guardians of the poor for purchasing or hiring land, or for building, hiring, and maintaining workhouses for the use of the poor, in their respective parishes or unions, or to borrow money for such purposes under the provisions of this or any other act or acts.

Sums to be raised for purposes of building charged on poor rates; not to exceed one year's amount of poor rates.

24. And be it further enacted, that for the better and more effectually securing the repayment of any sum or sums of money which may be borrowed for the purposes aforesaid, with interest, it shall be lawful for the said overseers or guardians to charge the future poor-rates of such parish or union with the amount of such sum or sums of money: provided always, that the principal sum or sums to be raised for such purposes, whether raised within the year or borrowed, shall in no case exceed the average annual amount of the rates raised for the relief of the poor in such parish or union for three years ending at the Easter next preceding the raising of such money; and that any loan or money borrowed for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be repaid by annual instalments of not less than one-tenth of the sum borrowed, with interest on the same, in any one year.

Power to order workhouses to be altered or enlarged, without consent, &c.

25. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby empowered, without requiring any such consent as aforesaid, by any writing under the hands and seal of the said commissioners, to order and direct the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse or workhouses, or any building capable of being converted into a workhouse or workhouses, to enlarge or alter the same, according to such plan and in such manner as the said commissioners shall deem most proper for carrying the provisions of this act into execution; and the overseers or guardians to whom any such order shall be directed are hereby authorized and required to assess, raise and levy such sum or sums of money as may be necessary for the purposes specified in such order, by such powers, ways, and means as are now by law given to or vested in churchwardens and overseers or guardians of the poor for altering, enlarging, and maintaining workhouses for the use of the poor in their respective parishes or unions; provided always that the principal sum or sums to be raised for such purposes, and charged upon any parish, shall not exceed in the whole the sum of fifty pounds, nor in any such case exceed one-tenth of the average annual amount of the rates, raised for the relief of the poor in such parish for the three years ending at the Easter next preceding the raising of such money.

Sums to be raised for such purposes not to exceed one-tenth of one year's rates, or 50l.

26. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by order under their hands and seal, to declare so many parishes as they may think fit to be united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and such parishes shall thereupon be deemed a union for such purpose, and thereupon the workhouse or workhouses of such parishes shall be for their common use; and the said commissioners may issue such rules, orders, and regulations as they shall deem expedient, for the classification of such of the poor of such united parishes in such workhouse or workhouses, as may be relieved in any such workhouse, and such poor may be received, maintained, and employed in any such workhouse or workhouses, as if the same belonged exclusively to the parish to which such poor shall be chargeable; but, notwithstanding such union and classification, each of the said parishes shall be separately chargeable with and liable to defray the expense of its own poor, whether relieved in or out of any such workhouse.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Parishes may be united by commissioners.

Each parish chargeable for its own poor.

27. And be it further enacted, that in any union which may be formed under this act, it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting for the district wherein such union may be situated, at their just and proper discretion, to direct, by order under their hands and seals, that relief shall be given to any adult person who shall from old age or infirmity of body be wholly unable to work, without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse: provided always, that one of such justices shall certify in such order, of his own knowledge, that such person is wholly unable to work, as aforesaid; and provided further, that such person shall be lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and shall desire to receive the same out of a workhouse.

Justices may order out-door relief to aged and infirm persons wholly unable to work.

28. And be it further enacted, that when any union of parishes for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, shall be proposed to be made or shall be made under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby required, from time to time, by such means and in such manner as they may think fit, to inquire into and ascertain the expense incurred by each parish proposed to form part of such union for the relief of the poor belonging to such parish, whether such relief shall have been given in or out of any workhouse, for the three years ending on the twenty-fifth day of March next preceding such inquiry, and thereupon the said commissioners shall proceed to calculate and ascertain the annual average expense of each parish for that period; and the several parishes included or proposed to be included in such union, shall from the time of effecting the same, contribute and be assessed to a common fund for purchasing, building, hiring or providing, altering or enlarging any workhouse or other place for the reception and relief of the poor of such parishes, or for the purchase or renting of any lands or tenements, under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, of or for such union, and for the future upholding and maintaining of such workhouses or places aforesaid, and the payment or allowance of the officers of such union, and the providing of utensils and materials for setting the poor on work therein, and for any other expense to be incurred for the common use or benefit or on the common account of such parishes, in the like proportions as on the said annual average of the said three years such relief had cost each such parish separately, until such average shall be varied or altered as hereinafter provided; provided always, and the said commissioners are hereby authorized, if they shall so think fit, but not otherwise, from time to time, either upon the application of the guardians of such union or of the overseers of any parish forming part of the same, or without such application, to cause a like inquiry and calculation to be made and average ascertained for the three years ending on the twenty-fifth day of March next preceding such inquiry; and from and after the ascertaining of any such average, or of any succeeding average, the respective parishes of such union shall contribute and be assessed to the common fund thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, in the proportions which the expense of such parishes shall be found to have borne to each other during such period upon the average which shall have been so last ascertained, until a like inquiry shall be again made, and a new average and proportion ascertained for the future assessment of such parishes.

When a union of parishes shall be proposed, commissioners to inquire the expense of poor belonging to each parish for three years preceding.

Power for taking future averages.

29. And whereas in divers unions formed under the said recited act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," or under local acts of incorporation, the whole of the expense, as well of upholding the united workhouses therein, as of maintaining and relieving the poor of the respective parishes of such unions, is assessed upon such parishes in the respective proportions fixed at the period when such unions were formed, and in others a part of such expenses is so levied, and a part subjected to variations at stated periods: and whereas some of the parishes of such unions have contributed and still continue to contribute, as their fixed proportion of the general fund, a sum much larger, and others a sum much less, than the actual expense incurred for the relief of the poor belonging to them respectively; for remedy thereof be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, to cause an inquiry to be made and an account rendered, as it may be practicable to render the same, by the visitors, directors, acting guardians, or other officers of such parishes or unions respectively, of the expense incurred for the relief of the poor belonging to each parish within any such union, whether such poor shall have been relieved in or out of such parish respectively, or in or out of any united workhouse, and whether such expense has been paid by the general fund of such union or the parochial funds of any of the parishes thereof, or by any private rate, or general subscription in lieu of a rate among the rate-payers of any such parish, and whether passed through the books or paid under the control of the managers or officers of such union, or not, for the period of three years ending on the twenty-fifth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty four, including therein a due proportion of the expense of maintaining the united workhouses and establishment of such union, calculated according to the actual expense otherwise incurred for the relief of the poor belonging to each such parish; and the average annual amount of such expense shall be deemed and taken to have been the annual expense incurred by such parish on account of its poor, notwithstanding such parish may have contributed a greater or smaller sum than such annual average to the general funds of the union during such period; and such annual average, so ascertained as aforesaid, shall, if the said commissioners shall see fit, and to such extent only as they may direct, be deemed and taken as the fixed proportion to be contributed and paid by each such parish respectively towards a common fund for the future hiring, maintaining, and upholding, repairing, altering, or enlarging of any workhouse, and the renting of any land used by such union at the passing of this act, and for the purchasing, building, hiring, maintaining, upholding, repairing, altering, or enlarging of any new workhouse or workhouses, or other place for the reception and relief of the poor belonging to the parishes of such union, and for the renting or purchase of any lands or tenements under or by virtue of the provisions of this act, and the payment or allowance of any officers of such union, and the providing of utensils or materials for setting the poor on work therein, and for any other expense to be in future incurred for the common use or benefit of such parishes, and in addition to the cost or proportion of cost of the poor of such parishes who shall be maintained or relieved in or out of any workhouse of such union, for which each such parish shall in future be charged separately; any provision or enactment in the said recited act or in any such local acts to the contrary notwithstanding; provided always, and the said commissioners are hereby authorized, if they see fit, but not otherwise, upon the application of the guardians of any such last-mentioned union, or of the overseers of any parish forming part of the same, or without such application, from time to time, to cause an inquiry and calculation to be made, and average ascertained, for the three years ending on the twenty-fifth day of March next preceding such inquiry, of the expense incurred by each such parish, as well in respect of its contribution to such common fund as of the cost or proportion of cost of its poor which shall have been maintained or relieved in or out of any workhouse of such union during such period of three years; and from and after the ascertaining of such average or of any succeeding average, the respective parishes of such union shall contribute and be assessed to the common fund thereof, for the purposes of which such common fund is hereinbefore declared to be applicable, in the proportions which the expense of such parishes shall be found to have borne to each other during such period, upon the average which shall have been so last ascertained, until a like inquiry shall be again made, and a new average and proportion ascertained for the future assessment of such parishes to such common fund: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any parishes already formed or hereafter to be formed into a union for the purposes of settlement or rating, or where the annual assessment is directed to be indifferently proportioned between the several parishes composing such union.

30. And for facilitating the inquiries directed by this act, be it enacted, that unless and until they shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said commissioners to be incorrect, the returns made to parliament of the sums expended for the relief of the poor of any parish for the last three years previous to the passing of this act, shall be deemed to be the actual expense incurred by each such parish respectively during that period for the purposes aforesaid, and on account of the poor belonging to such parish respectively, and shall be taken as the ground on which such averages shall be calculated and ascertained. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

31. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, so much of the said recited act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," as provides that no parish, township, hamlet, or place which shall be situate more than ten miles from any poorhouse or workhouse to be provided under the authority of that act shall be permitted to be united for the purposes therein mentioned with the parishes, townships, hamlets, and places which shall establish such poor house or workhouse as therein mentioned, and as limits the class or description of persons who shall be sent to such poorhouse or workhouse; and so much of a certain act made and passed in the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to repeal certain provisions in Local Acts for the maintenance and Management of the Poor," as repeals all enactments and provisions contained in any act or acts of parliament since the commencement of the reign of his late Majesty King George the First, whereby any parish, township, or hamlet, at a greater distance than ten miles from any house of industry or workhouse, shall thereafter be empowered or authorized to become contributors to or to take the benefit of such house of industry or workhouse, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Repeal of 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, s. 5, and 56 Geo. 3, c. 129, part of s. 1, restraining parishes from contributing to workhouse at a greater distance than ten miles; and of 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, s. 29, limiting class of persons to be sent to workhouses.

32. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, from time to time, as they may see fit, by order under their hands and seal, to declare any union, whether formed before or after the passing of this act (except when united for the purposes of settlement or rating), to be dissolved, or any parish or parishes, specifying the same, to be separated from or added to any such union, and, as the case may be, such union shall thereupon be dissolved, or such parish or parishes shall thereupon be separated from or added to such union accordingly; and the said commissioners shall in every such case frame and make such rules, orders, and regulations as they may think fit for adapting the constitution, management, and board of guardians of every such union, from or to which there shall be such separation or addition as aforesaid, to the altered state of the same, and every such union shall after any such alteration be constituted, managed, and governed as if the same had been originally formed in such altered state: and in case any union shall be wholly or partially dissolved as aforesaid, then the parishes constituting, or, in case of a partial dissolution, separated from any such union, shall thenceforth be subject to be re-united, or united with other parishes or unions, or otherwise dealt with according to the provisions of this act as the said commissioners shall think fit; provided always, that in every such case the said commissioners shall and they are hereby required to ascertain the proportionate value to every parish of such union of the workhouses or other property held or enjoyed by such union for the use of the poor or benefit of the rate-payers therein, and also the proportionate amount chargeable on every parish in respect of all the liabilities of such union existing at the time of such dissolution or alteration of the same, and the said commissioners shall thereupon fix the amount to be received, or paid or secured to be paid, by every parish affected by such alteration; and the sum to be received, if any, by such parish, shall be paid, or as the said commissioners shall direct, be secured to be paid to the overseers or guardians of the same, for the benefit of such parish, and in diminution of the rates thereof and of the expense attending such alteration; and the sum to be so paid or secured to be paid by every such parish shall be raised under the direction of the said commissioners, by the overseers or guardians of such parish, or charged on the poor rates of such parish, as the said commissioners may see fit, and shall be paid or secured for the use and benefit of the union from which the same parish shall have been so separated, or of the persons or parishes otherwise entitled thereto, as the case may be: provided always, that no such dissolution or alteration of the parishes constituting any such union, nor any addition thereto as aforesaid, shall in any manner prejudice, vary, or affect the rights or interests of third persons, unless such third persons, by themselves or their agents, shall consent in writing to such dissolution or proposed alteration or addition; and that no such dissolution, alteration, or addition shall take place or be made, unless a majority of not less than two thirds of the guardians of such union shall also concur therein; and in every such case, when the said majority of the guardians of such union shall so concur in such proposed alteration, the terms on which such concurrence shall have been given, if approved by the said commissioners, shall be binding and conclusive on the several parishes of such union.

Power to dissolve, add to, or take from any union; and thereupon to make such rules as may be adapted to its altered state.

Rights and interests of parishes, and claims on them, to be ascertained and secured.

Dissolution or alteration not to affect rights of third parties nor take place without the consent of guardians of parish.

33. And be it further enacted, that in any union already formed or which may hereafter be formed in pursuance of or under the provisions of this act, it shall and United parishes may be one pa-of settlement.

may be lawful for the guardians elected by the parishes forming such union, by any writing under the hands of all such guardians, to agree, subject to the approbation of the said commissioners, for or on behalf of the respective parishes forming such union, that for the purposes of settlement such parishes shall be considered as one parish; and in such case such agreement, having been first signed by the said guardians, shall be signed and sealed by the said commissioners, and one part thereof shall be deposited with the said commissioners, and a counterpart or counterparts thereof, signed by the said guardians, and signed and sealed by the said commissioners, deposited with the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, district, or liberty, in which the parishes of such union shall be respectively situate; and the said clerk of the peace shall and is hereby required, upon the receipt of such agreement, or counterpart or counterparts thereof, to file the same with the records of such county, riding, division, district, or liberty; and from and after the depositing of the same as aforesaid the said agreement shall for ever thereafter be binding on each of such parishes, and shall not be revoked or annulled; and the settlement of a poor person in any one of the parishes of such union, shall be considered, as between such parishes, a settlement in such union; and the expense of maintaining, supporting, and relieving every such poor person, and all other expenses of maintaining, supporting, and relieving the poor to which any one of such parishes shall be liable after the depositing of such agreement, part or counterpart aforesaid, or of ascertaining, litigating, or adjudging the settlement of any poor person in any of such parishes, shall form part of the general expenses and be paid out of the common funds of such union: provided always, that wherever such agreement is entered into as aforesaid, the rate or proportion of contribution to such common funds to be thereafter paid by each of the parishes of such union, shall be ascertained and fixed in like manner as in and by this act is provided for in cases where any union of parishes is made or proposed to be made under the provisions thereof, and shall not be subject to further variation.

Union may be one parish for purpose of rating with consent of guardians.

Agreement or counterpart for such rating to be deposited with clerk of the peace.

34. And be it further enacted, that where the parishes of any union shall be situate within the same county, riding, division, district or liberty, under the jurisdiction of the same justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for the guardians elected by the parishes forming such union, by any writing under the hands of all such guardians to agree, with the approbation of the said commissioners, for or on behalf of the respective parishes for which they shall so act as guardians, that for the purposes of raising in common the necessary funds for the relief of the poor of such union, such parishes shall be considered one parish; and in such case such agreement, having been first signed by the said guardians, shall be signed and sealed by the said commissioners, and one part thereof deposited with the said commissioners, and a counterpart or counterparts thereof, signed by the said guardians, and signed and sealed by the said commissioners, deposited with the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, district, or liberty, counties district, or districts, in which the said parishes of such union shall be situate; and the said clerk or clerks of the peace shall and is and are hereby required, upon the receipt of such agreement, part, or counterpart, to file the same with the records of such county, riding, division, district, or liberty, or counties, district, or districts, and from and after the depositing and filing of such last-mentioned agreement or counterpart, the same shall be for ever binding upon such parishes, and shall not be revoked or annulled.

Guardians to ascertain and assess value of property.

35. And be it further enacted, that from and after such depositing and filing of the said agreement, part, or counterpart, the said guardians shall, under such regulations as the said commissioners shall in that respect prescribe, proceed to ascertain and assess the value of the property in the several parishes of such union rateable to the relief of the poor, and to cause to be made such surveys and valuations of the said property, or any part thereof, as may be necessary, from time to time, to make a fair and just assessment upon the said united parishes in respect of such property so rateable as aforesaid; and all rates grounded on every such valuation or assessment shall be made, allowed, published, and recovered in such and the same manner as rates for the relief of the poor are now by law made, allowed, published and recovered; and the rate-payers shall have the like power of appeal against such last-mentioned rates as any persons now have against rates made for the relief of the poor.

Rates grounded on such assessment to be allowed as poor rates.

In such cases all expenditure for the poor to be in common.

36. And be it further enacted, that from and after any such common rate shall have come into operation, the proportions of contribution fixed at the period of uniting such parishes, or existing at the time of such last-mentioned agreement for a common rate, shall wholly cease; and all expenditure in respect of the poor of such union, or chargeable in any way on the poor rates of the respective parishes thereof, shall be deemed and be the common expenditure of such union, and be chargeable upon and paid out of the common or general fund to be raised upon such parishes under such common rate, according to the valuation or assessment of the rateable property in such parishes so ascertained, confirmed, and allowed by the said justices from time to time in manner hereinbefore provided: provided always, that the expense of every such valuation shall at all times be a charge on the common rate of such parishes: provided always that in case any parish of any union, at the period of entering into such agreement for the purposes of settlement or a common rate, shall not be represented by a guardian elected solely by such parish such parish shall not be bound by any such agreement, unless a majority of the owners of property and rate-payers in such parish, entitled to vote in the manner provided by this act, shall, by their votes in writing, testify their assent to such agreement, in such form as the said commissioners shall prescribe; and in case such assent shall not be so given, such parish shall be wholly omitted from such agreement, and be liable to pay such proportion only of the common assessment as it was bound to pay upon the forming of the union of such parishes.

37. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, no union or incorporation of parishes shall be formed under the provisions of the said act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, without the previous consent of the said commissioners testified under their hands and seal.

38. And be it further enacted, that where any parishes shall be united by order or with the concurrence of the said commissioners for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, a board of guardians of the poor for such union [shall be constituted and chosen, and the workhouse or workhouses of such union shall be governed, and the relief of the poor in such union shall be administered, by such board of guardians; and the said guardians shall be elected by the rate-payers, and by such owners of property in the parishes forming such union as shall in manner hereinafter mentioned require to have their names entered as entitled to vote as owners in the books of such parishes respectively; and the said commissioners shall determine the number and prescribe the duties of the guardians to be elected in each union, and also fix a qualification, without which no person shall be eligible as such guardian, such qualification to consist in being rated to the poor rate of some parish or parishes in such union, but not so as to require a qualification exceeding the annual rental of forty pounds, and shall also determine the number of guardians which shall be elected for any one or more of such parishes, having due regard to the circumstances of each such parish; provided always, that one or more guardians shall be elected for each parish included in such union; and such guardians, when so elected, shall continue in office until the twenty-fifth day of March next following their appointment, or until others are appointed in their stead, and on such twenty-fifth day of March, or if that day should fall on a Sunday or Good Friday, then on the day next following, or within fourteen days next after the said twenty-fifth day of March in every year, such guardians shall go out of office, and the guardians for the ensuing year shall be chosen; and in the event of any vacancy occurring in such board, by the death, removal or resignation, or refusal or disqualification to act of any elected guardian between the periods of such first and the next and any subsequent annual election, or in case the full number of guardians shall not be duly elected at such subsequent election of guardians for the time being, the other or remaining members of the said board shall continue to act until the next election, or until the completion of the said board, as if no such vacancy had occurred, and as if the number of such board were complete; and every justice of the peace residing in any such parish, and acting for the county, riding or division in which the same may be situated, shall be an ex officio guardian of such united or common workhouses, and shall, until such board of guardians shall be duly elected and constituted as aforesaid, and also, in case of any irregularity or delay in any subsequent election of guardians, receive and carry into effect the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners; and after such board shall be elected and constituted as aforesaid, every such justice shall ex officio be and be entitled, if he think fit, to act as a member of such board, in addition to and in like manner as such elected guardians: provided always, that, except where otherwise ordered by the said commissioners, and also except for the purpose of consenting to the dissolution or alteration of any union or any addition thereto, or to the formation of any union for the purposes of settlement or rating, no ex officio or other guardian of any such board as aforesaid shall have power to act in virtue of such office, except as a member and at a meeting of such board ; and no act of any such meeting shall be valid unless three members shall be present and concur therein : provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent such owners and rate-payers from re-electing the same persons or any or either of them to be guardians for the year next ensuing, nor from electing as a guardian any person who may already have been chosen as a guardian of any other parish.

39. And be it further enacted, that if the said commissioners shall, by any order under their hands and seal, direct that the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor of any single parish should be governed and administered by a board of guardians, then such board shall be elected and constituted, and authorized and entitled to act, for such single parish, in like manner in all respects as is herein-before enacted and provided in respect to a board of guardians for united parishes ; and every justice of the peace resident therein, and acting for the county, riding, or division in which the same is situated, shall be and may act as an ex officio member of such board.

40. And be it enacted, that in all cases of the election of guardians under this act, or wherever the consent of the owners of property or rate-payers in any parish or union shall be required for any of the purposes of this act, except when otherwise expressly provided for in this act, the votes of such owners and rate-payers shall be given or taken in writing, collected, and returned, in such manner as the said commissioners shall direct ; and in every such case the owner, as well as the rate-payer, in respect of any property in such parish or union, shall be entitled to vote, and the owner shall have the same number and proportion of votes respectively as is provided for inhabitants and other persons in and by an act made and passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, " An Act for the Regulation of Parish Vestries " and in and by an act to amend the same, made and passed in the fifty-ninth year of his said late majesty ; and the rate-payers under two hundred pounds shall each have a single vote : and the rate-payers rated at two hundred pounds or more, but under four hundred pounds, shall each have two votes, and the rate-payers rated at four hundred pounds or more, shall each have three votes ; and the majority of the votes of such owners and rate-payers which shall be actually collected and returned shall in every such case be binding on such parish : and for the purpose of ascertaining the number of votes to which each such owner shall be entitled, the aggregate amount of the assessment for the time being of any property belonging to such owner in such parish, or on any person or persons in respect of the same, to the poor-rate, shall be deemed to be and be taken as the annual value of such property to such owner ; and where any such owner shall be the bonâ fide occupier of any such property, he shall be entitled to vote as well in respect of his occupation as of his being such owner : provided always, that it shall be lawful for any owner from time to time, by writing under his hand, to appoint any person to vote as his proxy ; and every such appointment shall remain in force until revoked or recalled by such owner ; but no owner shall be entitled to vote, either in person or proxy, unless he shall, previous to the day on which he shall claim to vote, have given a statement in writing of his name and address, and the description of the property in the parish as owner whereof, or proxy for the owner whereof, he claims to vote, and if such proxy, the original or an attested copy of the writing appointing him such proxy, to the overseers of such parish ; and the said overseers are hereby required to enter in the rate books of such parish, or in some other book to be from time to time provided for that purpose, the names and addresses of the owners and proxies who shall send such statements, and the assessment of the rate for the relief of the poor of the property in respect whereof they respectively claim to vote : provided also, that every person who shall not vote, or who shall not comply with the directions to be made by the said commissioners for the giving, taking, or returning of votes, shall be omitted in the calculation of votes, and considered as having had no vote on the question whereon he might have voted : provided also, that no person shall be deemed a rate-payer, or be entitled to vote, or do any other act, matter, or thing as such, under the provisions of this act, unless he shall have been rated to the relief of the poor for the whole year immediately preceding his so voting or otherwise acting as such rate-payer, and shall have paid the parochial rates and assessments made and assessed upon him for the period of one whole year, as well as those due from him at the time of so voting or acting, except such as shall have been made or become due within the six months immediately preceding such voting or acting : provided always, that in cases of property belonging to any corporation aggregate, or to any joint stock or other company, no member of such corporation, or proprietor of or interested in such joint stock or other company, shall be entitled to vote as such owner in respect thereof; but any officer of such corporation, joint stock, or other company, whose name shall be entered by the direction of the governing body of such corporation or company in the books of the parish, in the manner herein-before directed with respect to the owner of property, shall be entitled to vote in respect of such property in the same manner as if he were the owner thereof.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

41. And be it further enacted, that all elections of guardians, visitors, and other officers, for the execution of any of the powers or purposes of the said recited act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," or of any local act of parliament relating to poorhouses, workhouses, or the relief of the poor, or any act to alter or amend the same respectively, shall hereafter, so far as the said commissioners shall direct, be made and conducted according to the provisions of this act: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they shall so think fit, from time to time, with the consent of the majority of the owners of property and rate-payers of any parish, or of any union now existing or to be formed under the provisions of this act, to alter the period for which the guardians to be appointed under the provisions of this act for such parish or union, or any of them, would under the provisions of this act hold office, for such other period or periods as to the said commissioners with such consent as aforesaid, shall seem expedient, and also to make such alterations in the number, mode of appointment, removal, and period of service of the guardians, or any of them, of any parish, or of any union now existing or to be formed under the provisions of this act, as to the said commissioners, with such consent as aforesaid, shall deem expedient.

Elections of guardians, visitors, and other officers under the act 22 G. 3, c. 83, or any local act to be made according to the provisions of this act.

42. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners may and are hereby authorized, by writing under their hands and seal, to make rules, orders, and regulations, to be observed and enforced at every workhouse already established by virtue of the said recited act made and passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," or any general or local act of parliament, or hereafter to be established by virtue of such acts, or of any of them, or of this or any other act of parliament relating to the relief of the poor, for the government thereof, and the nature and amount of the relief to be given to and the labour to be exacted from the persons relieved, and the preservation therein of good order, and from time to time to suspend, alter, vary, amend, or rescind the same, and make any new or other rules, orders, and regulations, to be observed and enforced as aforesaid, as they from time to time shall think fit, and to alter, at their discretion, any of the rules, orders, and regulations contained in the schedule to the said recited act, and also to alter or rescind any rules, orders, and regulations heretofore made in pursuance of the said recited act, or any local act of parliament relating to workhouses or the relief of the poor: and that all rules, orders, and regulations to be from time to time made by the said commissioners under the authority of this act shall be valid and binding, and shall be obeyed and observe as if the same were specifically made by and embodied in this act; subject, nevertheless, to the said power of the said commissioners from time to time to rescind, amend, suspend, or alter the same: provided always, that if any such rule, order, or regulation shall be, at the time of issuing the same, directed to and affect more than one union, the same shall be considered as a general rule, and subject and liable to all the provisions in this act contained respecting general rules.

Commissioners may make rules, &c. for present or future workhouses, and vary bye-laws already in force or to be made hereafter.

43. And be it further enacted, that where any rules, orders, or regulations, or any bye-laws, shall be made or directed by the said commissioners to be observed or enforced in any workhouse, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace acting in and for the county, place, or jurisdiction in which such workhouse shall be situate, to visit, inspect, and examine such workhouse at such times as he shall think proper, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such rules, orders, regulations, or bye-laws, are or have been duly observed and obeyed in such workhouse, as well as for such other purposes as justices are now authorized to visit workhouses under and by virtue of a certain act made and passed in the thirtieth year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to empower Justices and other Persons to Visit Parish Workhouses or Poorhouses, and Examine and Certify the State and Condition of the Poor therein to the Quarter Sessions;" and if in the opinion of such justice such rules, orders, regulations, or bye-laws, or any of them, have not been duly observed and obeyed in such workhouse, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon the party offending in such respect to appear before any two justices of the peace, to answer any Rules, &c. affecting more than one union to be deemed general rules.

The power given to justices, &c. to visit workhouses reserved where commissioners' rules, &c. are not in force.

Buildings taken for workhouses to be within the jurisdiction of the place to which they belong, though situated without.

No lunatic, insane person, or dangerous idiot, to be detained in a workhouse more than fourteen days.

Commissioners may direct overseers and guardians to appoint paid officers for parishes or unions; and fix their duties, and the mode of appointment and dismissal, and the security; and regulate their salaries.

Overseers, &c. to pass accounts quarterly.

complaint touching the non-observance of such rules, orders, regulations, and bye-laws, or any of them, and upon conviction before such two justices of the party so offending, such party shall forfeit and be liable to such penalties and punishments as are hereinafter prescribed and provided against parties wilfully neglecting or disobeying the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners: provided always, that where no such rules, orders, regulations, or bye-laws, shall have been directed by the said commissioners to be enforced and observed in the workhouse of any parish, nothing in this act contained shall be construed to restrain or prevent any justice of the peace, physician, surgeon, or apothecary, or the officiating clergyman of any parish, from visiting such workhouse, and examining and certifying the state and condition of the same, and of the poor therein, in such manner as they or any of them are authorized to do in and by the said last-recited act.

44. Whereas the jurisdiction of certain cities, boroughs, and corporate towns, is not always co-extensive with the parish in which it exists; be it therefore enacted, that every house or building which shall be erected, purchased, or hired as and for a workhouse, together with all premises and appurtenances thereto belonging, and the land or lands occupied therewith, shall be deemed and held to be within and subject to the local jurisdiction of such incorporated city, borough, or town to which they may respectively belong, though the same may be situated in such part of the respective parishes as may not be within the chartered boundaries thereof.

45. And be it further enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall authorize the detention in any workhouse of any dangerous lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for any longer period than fourteen days; and every person wilfully detaining in any workhouse any such lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for more than fourteen days, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any place duly licensed for the reception of lunatics and other insane persons, or to any workhouse being also a county lunatic asylum.

46. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as and when they shall see fit, by order under their hands and seal, to direct the overseers or guardians of any parish or union, or of so many parishes or unions as the said commissioners may in such order specify and declare to be united for the purpose only of appointing and paying officers, to appoint such paid officers with such qualifications as the said commissioners shall think necessary for superintending or assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and for the examining and auditing, allowing or disallowing of accounts in such parish or union, or united parishes, and otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution; and the said commissioners may and they are hereby empowered to define and specify and direct the execution of the respective duties of such officers, and the places or limits within which the same shall be performed, and direct the mode of the appointment and determine the continuance in office or dismissal of such officers, and the amount and nature of the security to be given by such of the said officers as the said commissioners shall think ought to give security, and, when the said commissioners may see occasion, to regulate the amount of salaries payable to such officers respectively, and the time and mode of payment thereof, and the proportions in which such respective parishes or unions shall contribute to such payment; and such salaries shall be chargeable upon and payable out of the poor rates of such parish or union, or respective parishes, in the manner and proportions fixed by the said commissioners, and shall be recoverable against the overseers or guardians of such parish or union, or parishes, by all such ways and means as the salaries of assistant overseers or other paid officers of any parish or union are recoverable by law; and all such payments shall be valid, and shall be allowed in the accounts of the overseers or guardians paying the same.

47. And be it further enacted, that every overseer, treasurer, or other person having the collection, receipt, or distribution of the monies assessed for the relief of the poor in any parish or union, or holding or accountable for any balance or sum of money, or any books, deeds, papers, goods, or chattels relating to the relief of the poor, or the collection or distribution of the poor rate of any parish or union, shall once in every quarter, in addition to the annual account now by law required, and where the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners shall have come in force, then as often as the said rules, orders, and regulations shall direct, but not less than once in every quarter, make and render to the guardians, auditors, or such other persons as by virtue of any statute or custom, or of the said rules, orders, or regulations, may be appointed to examine, audit, allow, or disallow such accounts, or in default of any such guardian, auditor, or other person being so appointed as aforesaid, then to the justices of the peace at their petty sessions for the division in which such parish or union shall be situate, a full and distinct account in writing of all monies, matters, and things committed to their charge, or received, held, or expended by them on behalf of any such parish or union, and if thereunto required by the justices, guardians, auditors, or other persons authorized in that behalf, shall verify on oath the truth of all such accounts and statements from time to time respectively, or subscribe a declaration to the truth thereof, in manner and under the penalties in this act provided for parties giving false evidence or refusing to give evidence under the provisions of this act; and all balances due from any guardian, treasurer, overseer or assistant overseer, or other person having the control and distribution of the poor rate, or accountable for such balances, may be recovered in the same manner as any penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act: provided, nevertheless, that no such proceeding shall exonerate or discharge the liability of the surety of any such treasurer, overseer, assistant overseer, or other person as aforesaid.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Recovery of balancesSurety not to be discharged.

48. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners may and they are hereby authorized and empowered, as and when they shall think proper, by order under their hands and seal, either upon or without any suggestion or complaint in that behalf from the overseers or guardians of any parish or union, to remove any master of any workhouse, or assistant overseer, or other paid officer of any parish or union whom they shall deem unfit for or incompetent to discharge the duties of any such office, or who shall at any time refuse or wilfully neglect to obey and carry into effect any of the rules, orders, regulations, or bye-laws of the said commissioners, whether such union shall have been made or such officer appointed before or after the passing of this act, and to require from time to time the persons competent in that behalf to appoint a fit and proper person in his room; and that any person so removed shall not be competent to be appointed to or to fill any paid office connected with the relief of the poor in any such parish or union, except with the consent of the said commissioners under their hands and seal: provided always, that no person shall be eligible to hold any parish office, or have the management of the poor in any way whatever, who shall have been convicted of felony, fraud, or perjury.

Masters of workhouses and parish officers to be under order of board, and removable by them.

49. And be it further enacted, that any contract which shall be entered into by or on behalf of any parish or union, for or relating to the maintenance, clothing, lodging, employment, or relief of the poor, or for any other purpose relating to or connected with the general management of the poor, which shall not be made and entered into in conformity with the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners in that behalf in force at the time of making and entering into the same, or otherwise sanctioned by them, shall be voidable, and, if the said commissioners shall so direct, shall be null and void; and all payments made under or in pursuance of any contract not made and entered into in conformity with such rules, orders, or regulations, at any period after the said commissioners shall have declared the same to be null and void as aforesaid, shall be disallowed in passing the accounts of the overseer, guardian, or other officer by whom such payments shall have been made.

Contracts not to be valid unless conformable to the rules of commissioners.

50. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act a certain act made and passed in the forty-fifth year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to amend an Act made in the ninth year of King George the First, for Amending the Laws relating to the Settlement, Employment, and Relief of the Poor, so far as the same respects Contracts to be entered into for the Maintenance and Employment of the Poor," shall be and the same is hereby repealed: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to affect or make void any bond or other security which shall have been entered into or given before the passing of this act, under or in pursuance of the provisions of the said act hereby repealed.

Repeal of 45
Geo. 3, c. 54, as to contracts.

51. And be it further enacted, that so much of a certain act made and passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An act to prevent poor Persons in Workhouses from embezzling certain Property provided for their Use; to alter and amend so much of an Act of the thirty-sixth year of his present Majesty as restrains Justices of the Peace from ordering Relief to poor Persons in certain cases for a longer Period than one Month at a time; and for other purposes therein mentioned, relating to the Poor," as inflicts a penalty on persons having the management of the poor if concerned in providing or in any contract for the supply of any goods, materials, or provisions for the use of any workhouse or workhouses, or otherwise for the support or maintenance of the poor for their own profit, and all remedies for the recovery of such penalties, shall apply, and the same are hereby extended and made applicable to every commissioner, act.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Commissioners to regulate the relief to able-bodied paupers and their families out of the workhouse.

Relief contrary to their regulations to be disallowed.

But overseers may delay the operation of such regulations under special circumstances, and make report thereof to commissioners.

If commissioners disapprove of delay, they may fix a day from which all such relief shall be disallowed.

Cases of emergency.

Repeal of 36 Geo. 3, c. 23; 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 3 & 4; and 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 2, & 5.

assistant commissioner, guardian, treasurer, master of a workhouse, or other officer to be appointed under the provisions of this act.

51. And whereas a practice has obtained of giving relief to persons or their families, who at the time of applying for or receiving such relief were wholly or partially in the employment of individuals, and the relief of the able-bodied and their families is in many places administered in modes productive of evil in other respects; and whereas difficulty may arise in case any immediate and universal remedy is attempted to be applied in the matters aforesaid; be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by such rules, orders, or regulations as they may think fit, to declare to what extent and for what period the relief to be given to able-bodied persons or to their families in any particular parish or union may be administered out of the workhouse of such parish or union, by payments in money, or with food or clothing in kind, or partly in kind and partly in money, and in what proportions, to what persons or class of persons, at what times and places, on what conditions, and in what manner such out-door relief may be afforded; and all relief which shall be given by any overseer, guardian, or other person having the control or distribution of the funds of such parish or union, contrary to such orders or regulations, shall be, and the same is hereby declared to be unlawful, and shall be disallowed in the accounts of the person giving the same, subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned; provided always, that in case the overseers or guardians of any parish or union to which such orders or regulations shall be addressed or directed shall, upon consideration of the special circumstances of such parish or union, or of any person or class of persons therein, be of opinion that the application and enforcing of such orders or regulations, or of any part thereof, at the time or in the manner prescribed by the said commissioners, would be inexpedient, it shall be lawful for such overseers or guardians to delay the operation of such orders or regulations, or of any part thereof, for any period not exceeding the space of thirty days, to be reckoned from the day of the receipt of such orders or regulations; and such overseers or guardians shall, twenty days at the least before the expiration of such thirty days, make a statement and report of such special circumstances to the said commissioners; and all relief which shall be given by such overseers or guardians, before an answer to such report shall have been returned by the said commissioners, if otherwise lawful, shall not be deemed unlawful, although the same shall have been given contrary to such orders or regulations, or any of them; but in case the said commissioners shall disapprove of such delay, or think that for the future such orders or regulations ought to come into operation, notwithstanding the special circumstances alleged by such overseer or guardian, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by a peremptory order, to direct that from and after a day to be fixed thereby such orders and regulations, or such parts or modifications thereof as they may think expedient and proper, shall be enforced and observed by such overseers and guardians; and if any allowance be made or relief given by such overseers or guardians after the said last-mentioned period, contrary to any such last-mentioned order, the amount of the relief or allowance so given shall be disallowed in the accounts of the party giving the same: provided also, that a quarterly report of all such cases as shall occur in any quarter shall, at the end of every such quarter, be laid by the said commissioners before one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state: provided also, that in case the overseers or guardians of any parish or union in which such orders or regulations shall be in force shall depart from them or any of them in any particular instance or instances of emergency, and shall within fifteen days after every such departure report the same and the grounds thereof to the said commissioners, and the said commissioners shall approve of such departure, or if the relief so given shall have been given in food, temporary lodging, or medicine, and shall have been so reported as aforesaid, then and in either of such cases the relief granted by such overseers or guardians, if otherwise lawful, shall not be unlawful or subject to be disallowed.

53. And be it further enacted, that an act passed in the thirty-sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty king George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend so much of an Act made in the ninth year of the reign of King George the First, intituled 'An Act for amending the Laws relating to the Settlement, Employment, and Relief of the Poor,' as prevents the distributing occasional Relief to poor persons in their own Houses, under certain circumstances and in certain cases;" and so much of an act made and passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to prevent poor Persons in Workhouses from embezzling certain Property provided for their use, to alter and amend so much of an Act of the thirty-sixth year of his present Majesty as restrains Justices of the Peace from ordering Relief to poor Persons in certain cases for a longer period than One Month at a time, and for other purposes therein mentioned relating to the Poor," as extends the period for which occasional relief may be ordered by any justice, or justices to poor persons at their own homes; and so much of the said act made and passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor," as empowers any justice or justices to order relief in certain cases for a limited time, or in cases of urgent necessity, or in cases where parishes are under the management of guardians, governors, or directors appointed by special or local acts, or in cases where parishes have not a select vestry, shall be and the same are hereby repealed.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

54. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, the ordering, giving and directing of all relief to the poor of any parish, which according to the provisions of any of the said recited acts, or of an act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better regulating of Vestries, and for the appointment of Auditors of Accounts in certain Parishes in England and Wales," or of this act, or of any local acts, shall be under the government and control of any guardians of the poor, or of any select vestry, and whether forming part of any union or incorporation or not, (but subject in all cases to, and saving and excepting the powers of, the said commissioners appointed under this act,) shall appertain and belong exclusively to such guardians of the poor, or select vestry, according to the respective provisions of the acts under which such guardians or select vestry may have been or shall be appointed; and it shall not be lawful for any overseer of the poor to give any further or other relief or allowance from the poor rate than such as shall be ordered by such guardians or select vestry, except in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, in which cases he is hereby required to give such temporary relief as each case shall require, in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, and whether the applicant for relief be settled in the parish where he shall apply for relief or not: provided always, that in case such overseer shall refuse or neglect to give such necessary relief in any case of necessity to poor persons not settled nor usually residing in the parish to which such overseer belongs, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace to order the said overseer, by writing under his hand and seal, to give such temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, as the case shall require, but not in money; and in case such overseer shall disobey such order, he shall, on conviction before two justices, forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds which such justices shall order: provided always, that any justice of the peace shall be empowered to give a similar order for medical relief (only) to any parishioner, as well as out-parishioner, where any case of sudden and dangerous illness may require it; and any overseer shall be liable to the same penalties as aforesaid for disobeying such order; but it shall not be lawful for any justice or justices to order relief to any person or persons from the poor-rates of any such parish, except as hereinbefore provided.

No relief to be in future given, except by board of guardians, &c. 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 80.

Any justice may give order for medical relief in dangerous illness.

55. And be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the master of every workhouse, or such other paid officer of the parish or union as the said commissioners may direct, shall, on such day and in such form as the said commissioners shall appoint, take an account of, and register in a book to be provided at the expense of the parish or union to which such workhouse shall belong, and to be kept specially for that purpose, the name of every poor person who shall on such days be in the receipt of relief at or in such workhouse, together with such particulars respecting the families and settlement of every such poor person, and his and their relief and employment, as the said commissioners shall think fit; and in like manner, on such day as the said commissioners shall appoint, the overseer of the poor of every such parish shall register in a book, to be provided and kept as aforesaid, the name of every poor person then in the receipt of relief in such parish out of the workhouse, together with such particulars respecting the family and settlement of every such poor person, and his and her relief and employments, as the said commissioners shall think fit; and after such account shall have been so taken and registered as aforesaid a similar register and account shall be kept by the like persons respectively of all persons who shall receive relief at or in or out of a workhouse, when and as often as such relief shall be granted.

Masters of workhouses and overseers to keep registers.

56. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act that all relief given to or on account of the wife, or to or on account of any child or children under the age of sixteen, not being blind or deaf and dumb, shall be considered as given to the husband of such wife, or to the father of such child or children, as the case may be, and any relief given to or on account of any child or Poor persons liable for relief to wife or children.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

43 Eliz. c. 2.

Husband liable to maintain children of wife born before marriage.

Such relief as commissioners may direct to be considered as loan.

Power to justices to attach wages in hands of master or employer.

Mode of proceeding against masters for recovery thereof.

Repeal of so much of 43 G. 3, c. 47, as requires relief to be given to wives and families of substitutes, hired men, or volunteers of militia.

children under the age of sixteen of any widow, shall be considered as given to such widow: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall discharge the father and grandfather, mother and grandmother, of any poor child, from their liability to relieve and maintain such poor child in pursuance of the provisions of a certain act of parliament passed in the forty-third year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Poor."

57. And be it further enacted, that every man who from and after the passing of this act shall marry a woman having a child or children at the time of such marriage, whether such child or children be legitimate or illegitimate, shall be liable to maintain such child or children as a part of his family, and shall be chargeable with all relief, or the cost price thereof, granted to or on account of such child or children, until such child or children shall respectively attain the age of sixteen, or until the death of the mother of such child or children; and such child or children shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed a part of such husband's family accordingly.

58. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, any relief, or the cost price thereof, which shall be given to or on account of any poor person above the age of twenty-one, or to his wife, or any part of his family under the age of sixteen, and which the said commissioners shall by any rule, order, or regulation declare or direct to be given or considered as given by way of loan, and whether any receipt for such relief, or engagement to repay the same, or the cost price thereof, or any part thereof, shall have been given or not by the person to or on account of whom the same shall have been so given, shall be considered and the same is hereby declared to be a loan to such poor person.

59. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where any relief shall have been given by way of loan, or where any relief, or the cost price thereof, shall be treated as a loan, under the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners, or the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of the overseers or guardians of the parish or union providing such relief, and upon proof of the same having been given to or on account of any such person, his wife or family, as aforesaid, and of the same, or any part thereof, still remaining due, to issue a summons, requiring such person, as well as the master or employer of such person, or some person on his behalf, to appear before any two justices, at a time and place to be named in such summons, to show cause why any wages due, or which may from time to time become due, from such master or employer, should not be paid over, in whole or in part, to such overseers or guardians; and if no sufficient cause be shown to the contrary, or if such person, or some one on his behalf, shall not appear on the return of such summons, then the said justices shall, by order under their hands, direct the master or employer for the time being, from whom any wages shall be due or from time to time become due or payable to such poor person, to pay, either in one sum, or by such weekly or other instalments as the said justices shall in their discretion think fit, taking into consideration the circumstances of such poor person and his family, out of such wages, to such overseers or guardians, the amount of such relief, or so much thereof as shall from time to time be due or unpaid; and the payment to and receipt of any such overseer or guardian shall be a good discharge to such master or employer for so much of any such wages as shall be so paid by virtue of any such order; and if any such master or employer shall refuse or neglect to pay to the overseer or guardian producing any such order the money thereby directed to be paid, according to the terms of such order, and at the periods thereby fixed for such payment, the same may be levied and recovered, and the payment thereof from time to time enforced against such master or employer, in such and the like manner as penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act.

60. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act so much of an act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of his said late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending the several Laws for providing Relief for the Families of Militiamen in England when called out into actual Service," as directs overseers of the poor, by order of some one justice of the peace, to pay to the family of any person serving or enrolled as a balloted man, substitute, hired man, or volunteer in the militia of England, a weekly allowance, or as authorizes any justice or justices to order such allowance to be paid under the rules and conditions in the said recited act provided, or as in any way discharges such balloted man, substitute, hired man, or volunteer from the liability to maintain or repay the costs of maintenance of his family or any part thereof, or as prevents such families or any part thereof from being removable to their place of legal settlement, or sent to any workhouse, by reason of their receiving any allowance or being chargeable, shall be and the same is hereby repealed. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

61. And be it further enacted, that from and after the period at which any rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners shall come into operation for the binding of poor children apprentices, in addition to such assent or consent, order or allowance of justices, as are now required by law, such justices or any one justice are and is hereby authorized and required to examine and ascertain whether the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners then in force for the binding of poor children apprentices have been complied with, and to certify the same at the foot of every such contract or indenture, and of the counterpart thereof, in such form and manner as the said commissioners by such rules, orders, or regulations may direct, and until so certified no such contract or indenture of apprenticeship shall be valid: provided nevertheless, that nothing in this act, or in any rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners, shall affect the jurisdiction of any justices of the peace over any master or apprentice during the period of apprenticeship.

Justices to certify that rules of commissioners have been complied with in binding poor children apprentices.

Justice's power reserved as between master and apprentice.

62. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the rate-payers in any parish, and such of the owners of property therein as shall, in manner hereinbefore mentioned, have required their names to be entered in the rate books of such parishes respectively as entitled to vote as owners, assembled at a meeting to be duly convened and held for the purpose, after public notice of the time and place of holding such meeting, and the purpose for which the same is intended to be held, shall have been given in like manner as notices of vestry meetings are published and given, to direct that such sum or sums of money, not exceeding half the average yearly rate for the three preceding years, as the said owners and rate-payers so assembled at such meeting may think proper, shall be raised or borrowed as a fund, or in aid of any fund or contribution for defraying the expenses of the emigration of poor persons having settlements in such parish, and willing to emigrate, to be paid out of or charged upon the rates raised or to be raised for the relief of the poor in such parish, and to be applied under and according to such rules, orders, and regulations as the said commissioners shall in that behalf direct: provided always, that no such direction for raising money for such purpose as aforesaid shall have any force or effect unless and until confirmed by the said commissioners, and that the time to be limited for the repayment of any sum so charged on such rates as aforesaid shall in no case exceed the period of five years from the time of borrowing the same: provided also, that all sums of money so raised as last hereinbefore mentioned, and advanced by way of loan, for the purposes of emigration, or such proportion thereof as the said commissioners shall by any rule, order, or regulation from time to time direct, shall be recoverable against any such person, being above the age of twenty-one years, who or whose family, or any part thereof, having consented to emigrate, shall refuse to emigrate after such expenses shall have been so incurred, or having emigrated shall return, in such and the like manner as is hereinbefore provided with respect to relief, or the cost price of relief, given or considered to be given by way of loan to any person, his wife or family.

Power to owners and rate-payers to raise money on security of rates for purposes of emigration.

63. And be it further enacted, that where it shall be lawful, under the provisions of any of the herein recited acts, or of any local act, or of this act, to raise or borrow any sum or sums of money for the purpose of purchasing, building, altering, or enlarging any workhouse or workhouses in any parish or union, or for purchasing land whereon to build the same, or for defraying the expenses of the emigration of poor persons having settlements in any parish, and being willing to emigrate, it shall be lawful for the overseers or guardians of such parish or union, with the consent of the said commissioners, to be testified under their hands and seal, to make application for an advance of any sum necessary for any such purposes to the commissioners appointed under an act made and passed in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to authorize the Issue of Exchequer Bills, and the Advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund, to a limited Amount, for the carrying on of Public Works and Fisheries in the United Kingdom, and Employment of the Poor in Great Britain, in manner therein mentioned," and of any act or acts passed for amending or continuing the same; and the said Exchequer Bill Loan Commissioners are hereby empowered to make such advances, upon any such application as aforesaid, upon the security of the rates for the relief of the poor in such parish or union, and without requiring any further or other security than a charge on such rates.

Overseers may apply to commissioners of exchequer bills under act 57 G. 3, c. 34, for advance of money.

64. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act no settlement shall be acquired by hiring and service, or by residence under the same, or by serving an office.

Repeal of settlement by hiring and service.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

No settlement incomplete under hiring and service to be completed.

No settlement acquired without paying poor rate; nor by being apprenticed in the sea service; nor by possession longer than the person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof.

Repeal of acts relating to liability and punishment of putative father, and punishment of mother of illegitimate children.

Securities and recognizances for indemnity of parishes against children likely to be born bastards to be null and void.

Persons in custody for not giving indemnity to be discharged.

Mother of illegitimate children bound to maintain the same.

Court of quarter sessions, on appli-

65. And be it further enacted, that no person under any contract of hiring and service not completed at the time of the passing of this act shall acquire, or be deemed or adjudged to have acquired, any settlement by reason of such hiring and service, or of any residence under the same.

67. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act no settlement shall be acquired by being apprenticed in the sea service, or to a householder exercising the trade of the seas as a fisherman or otherwise, nor by any person now being such an apprentice in respect of such apprenticeship.

68. And be it further enacted, that no person shall be deemed, adjudged, or taken to retain any settlement, gained by virtue of any possession of any estate or interest in any parish, for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof; and in case such person shall cease to inhabit within such distance, and thereafter become chargeable, such person shall be liable to be removed to the parish wherein, previously to such inhabitancy, he may have been legally settled, or in case he may have subsequently to such inhabitancy gained a legal settlement in some other parish, then to such other parish.

69. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act so much of any act or acts of parliament as enables any single woman to charge any person with having gotten her with any child of which she shall then be pregnant, or as renders any person so charged liable to be apprehended or committed, or required to give security, on any such charge, or as enables the mother of any bastard child or children to charge or affiliate any such child or children on any person as the reputed or putative father thereof, or as enables any overseer or guardian to charge or make complaint against any person as such reputed or putative father, and to require him to be charged with or contribute to the expenses attending the birth, sustentation, or maintenance of any such child or children, or to be imprisoned or otherwise punished for not contributing thereto, or as in any way renders such reputed or putative father liable to punishment or contribution as such, or as enables churchwardens and overseers, by the order of any two justices of the peace, confirmed by the sessions, to take, seize, and dispose of the goods and chattels, or to receive the annual rents or profits of the lands of any putative father of bastard children, and so much of any such act or acts as renders an unmarried woman with child liable as such to be summoned, examined, or removed, or as renders the mother of any bastard liable as such to be imprisoned or otherwise punished, shall, so far as respects any child which shall be likely to be born, or shall be born a bastard, after the passing of this act, or the mother or putative father of such child, be and the same is hereby repealed.

70. And be it further enacted, that every security given or recognizance entered into by any person or persons, or his or their surety, before the passing of this act, to indemnify any parish or place as to any child or children likely to be born a bastard or bastards, whereof any single woman shall be pregnant at the time of the passing of this act, or to abide and perform such order or orders as might have been made touching such child or children, pursuant to an act made and passed in the eighteenth year of the reign of her said late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, concerning bastards begotten and born out of lawful matrimony, shall be and the same are hereby declared null and void; and every person who shall at the time of the passing of this act be in custody upon the commitment of any justice or justices for not having given such security or entered into such recognizance, shall be discharged upon the application of such person by any one of the visiting justices of the gaol in which such person shall be in custody under any such commitment.

71. And be it further enacted, that every child, which shall be born a bastard after the passing of this act, shall have and follow the settlement of the mother of such child, until such child shall attain the age of sixteen, or shall acquire a settlement in its own right; and such mother, so long as she shall be unmarried or a widow, shall be bound to maintain such child as a part of her family, until such child shall attain the age of sixteen; and all relief granted to such child while under the age of sixteen shall be considered as granted to such mother; provided always, that such liability of such mother as aforesaid shall cease on the marriage of such child, if a female.

72. And be it enacted, that when any child shall hereafter be born a bastard, and shall, by reason of the inability of the mother of such child to provide for its maintenance, become chargeable to any parish, the overseers or guardians of such parish, or the guardians of any union in which such parish may be situate, may, if they think proper, after diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, apply to the next general quarter sessions of the peace within the jurisdiction of which such parish or union shall be situate, after such child shall have become chargeable, for an order upon the person whom they shall charge with being the putative father of such child, to reimburse such parish or union for its maintenance and support; and the court to which such application shall be made shall proceed to hear evidence thereon, and if it shall be satisfied, after hearing both parties, that the person so charged is really and in truth the father of such child, it shall make such order upon such person in that respect as to such court shall appear to be just and reasonable under all the circumstances of the case: provided always, that no such order shall be made unless the evidence of the mother of such bastard child shall be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to the satisfaction of such court; provided also, that such order shall in no case exceed the actual expense incurred or to be incurred for the maintenance and support of such bastard child while so chargeable, and shall continue in force only until such child shall attain the age of seven years, if he shall so long live: provided also, that no part of the monies paid by such putative father, in pursuance of such order, shall at any time be paid to the mother of such bastard child, nor in any way be applied to the maintenance and support of such mother.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

cation of overseers, &c. may make an order on putative father of child for its support.

Monies paid not applicable to support of mother.

73. And be it enacted, that no such application shall be heard at such sessions unless fourteen days notice shall have been given under the hands of such overseers or guardians to the person intended to be charged with being the father of such child of such intended application: and in case there shall not, previously to such sessions, have been sufficient time to give such notice, the hearing of such application shall be deferred to the next ensuing general quarter sessions: provided always, that whenever such application shall be heard, the costs of the maintenance of such bastard child shall, in case the court shall think fit to make an order thereon, be calculated from the birth of such bastard child, if such birth shall have taken place within six calendar months previous to such application being heard; but if such birth shall have taken place more than six calendar months previously to such application being heard, then from the day of the commencement of six calendar months next preceding the hearing of such application: provided also, that if upon the hearing of such application the court shall not think fit to make any order thereon, it shall order and direct that the full costs and charges incurred by the person so intended to be charged in resisting such application shall be paid by such overseers or guardians.

No application to be heard without fourteen days previous notice.

If application be heard, costs may be calculated from birth of bastard child, if within six months.

74. And be it enacted, that if such person so intended to be charged shall not appear by himself or his attorney at the time when such application shall come on to be heard before such court, according to such notice, such court shall nevertheless proceed to hear the same, unless such overseers or guardians shall produce an agreement under the hand of such person to abide by such order as such court shall make thereon, without the hearing of evidence by such court: provided always, that such court may, notwithstanding such agreement, require that evidence shall be given in support of such application, if it thinks fit, before such order is made.

In the event of party charged not appearing, court may nevertheless enter into the case.

75. And be it enacted, that whenever such overseers or guardians shall have determined to make such application as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for one justice of the peace, at the request of such overseers or guardians, to summon the person so intended to be charged with being the father of such bastard child to appear before him; and if such justice shall be satisfied that such person has any intention to abscond or keep out of the way, in order to avoid the consequences of such application, such justice may require such person to enter into a recognizance to appear and answer thereto, and in case such person shall refuse or neglect to enter into such recognizance, may commit such person to the goal or house of correction of the county, riding, or division within which such parish shall be situate, until he shall enter into such recognizance, or until such application shall be heard.

Party summoned, if suspected of intending to abscond, may be required to enter into a recognizance for his appearance.

76. And be it enacted, that if at any time after the expiration of one calendar month after an order shall have been made in pursuance of such application it shall appear to one justice, upon the oath of any one of such overseers or guardians, that the payments directed to be made by such order have not been made according thereto, and are in arrear, it shall be lawful for such justice or any other justice, by warrant under his hand seal, to cause such putative father of such bastard child to be brought before two justices of the peace; and in case such putative father shall refuse or neglect to make payment of such sum of money as shall appear to such justices to be due from him under such order, together with

When payments get into arrear, putative father may be proceeded against by distress or attachment of wages.

4&5 W.4, c.76. the costs of apprehension, it shall be lawful for such or any two justices to proceed to recover such sum and costs by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such putative father, or by attaching the wages of such putative father for the recovery of such sum and costs, in the same manner as wages may be attached under the provisions of this act.

No person employed in administration of poor laws to furnish, for his own profit, goods or provisions given in parochial relief.

77. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person hereafter to be appointed in any parish or union to any office concerned in the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, or for any person who after the twenty-fifth day of March one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five shall fill any such office, to furnish or supply, for his own profit or on his own account, any goods, materials or provision ordered to be given in parochial relief, or to furnish or supply any goods, materials, or provisions for or in respect of the money ordered to be given in parochial relief, to any person in such parish or union; and every person holding such office shall, on conviction before any two justices of the peace, be subject to a penalty of five pounds for such offence, one-half of which penalty shall be paid to the informer, and the other half in aid of the poor-rates of such parish or union.

Sums payable under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7. by relations of poor persons, how recoverable.

78. And be it further enacted, that all sums of money which shall be assessed by any justices of the peace on the father, grandfather, mother, grandmother, child, or children of any poor person, for the relief or maintenance of such poor person, under or by virtue of the provisions of a certain act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Poor," or of any act to amend the same, or of this act, and all penalties and forfeitures to which any person so assessed by such justices for such relief or maintenance, shall be liable for any default in paying the same by virtue of the provisions of any of the said recited acts or of this act, shall be recoverable against every person so assessed or charged, in like manner as penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under the provisions of this act.

No person to be removed till after notice of his being chargeable has been sent to the parish to which order of removal is directed.

79. And be it further enacted, that from and after the first day of November one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four no poor person shall be removed or removable, under any order of removal from any parish or workhouse, by reason of his being chargeable to or relieved therein, until twenty-one days after a notice in writing of his being so chargeable or relieved, accompanied by a copy or counterpart of the order of removal of such person, and by a copy of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been sent, by post or otherwise, by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order, or any three or more of such guardians, to the overseers of the parish to whom such order shall be directed: provided always that if such overseers or guardians as last aforesaid, or any three or more of such guardians, shall by writing under their hands agree to submit to such order, and to receive such poor person, it shall be lawful to remove such poor person according to the tenor of such order, although the said period of twenty-one days may not have elapsed: provided also, that if notice of appeal against such order of removal shall be received by the overseers or guardians of the parish from which such poor person is directed in such order to be removed within the said period of twenty-one days, it shall not be lawful to remove such poor person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal shall have expired, or, in case such appeal shall be duly prosecuted, until after the final determination of such appeal.

Such person may be removed if order submitted to;

but not in case of appeal.

In case of appeal the overseers to have access to such poor person touching his settlement.

80. And be it enacted, that the overseers or guardians of the parish giving such notice of appeal, or their attorney, or any other person authorized by them, shall, until such appeal shall have been heard and decided, at all proper times have free access to such poor person for the purpose of examining him touching his settlement; and in case it shall be necessary for the more effectual examination of such person that he should be taken out of the removing parish, such overseers or guardians shall be permitted to remove him therefrom for the time which may be necessary for that purpose: provided always, that the expense of such removal, and of his maintenance during the same, shall be defrayed by the appellant parish.

Grounds of appeal to be stated in notice.

81. And be it further enacted, that after the first day of November one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, in every case where notice of appeal against such order shall be given, the overseers or guardians of the parish appealing against such order, or any three or more of such guardians, shall with such notice, or fourteen days at least before the first day of the sessions at which such appeal is intended to be tried, send or deliver to the overseers of the respondent parish a statement in writing under their hands of the grounds of such appeal; and it shall not be lawful for the overseers of such appellant parish to be heard in support of such appeal, unless such notice and statement shall have been so given as aforesaid: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the respondent or appellant parish, on the hearing of any appeal, to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of removal, or of appeal against any order of removal, than those set forth in such respective order, examination, or statement as aforesaid. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

82. And be it further enacted, that upon every such appeal the court before whom the same shall be brought shall and may, if they think fit, order and direct the parish against which the same shall be decided to pay to the other such costs and charges as may to such court appear just and reasonable, and shall certify the amount thereof; and in case the overseers of the poor of the parish liable to pay the same, shall upon demand, and upon the production of such certificate, refuse or neglect to pay the same, the amount thereof may be recovered from such overseer in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are by this act recoverable. Parish losing appeal to pay such costs as court may direct.

83. And be it further enacted, that if either of the parties shall have included in the order or statement sent as hereinbefore directed any grounds of removal or of appeal, which shall in the opinion of the justices determining the appeal be frivolous and vexatious, such party shall be liable, at the discretion of the said justices, to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such grounds, such costs to be recovered in the manner hereinbefore directed as to the other costs incurred by reason of such appeal. Party making frivolous or vexatious statement to pay costs.

84. And be it further enacted, that the parish to which any poor person whose settlement shall be in question at the time of granting relief shall be admitted or finally adjudged to belong, shall be chargeable with and liable to pay the cost and expense of the relief and maintenance of such poor person, and such cost and expense may be recovered against such parish in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are by this act recoverable: provided always, that such parish, if not the parish granting such relief, shall pay to the parish by which such relief shall be granted the cost and expense of such relief and maintenance from such time only as notice of such poor person having become chargeable shall have been sent by such relieving parish to the parish to which such poor person shall be so admitted or finally adjudged to belong: provided always, that no charges or expenses of relief or maintenance shall be recoverable under a suspended order of removal, unless notice of such order of removal, with a copy of the same, and of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been given within ten days of such order being made to the overseers of the poor of the parish to whom such order is directed. Costs of relief to be paid by parish to which poor persons belong.

85. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby empowered from time to time, as they may think fit, to require from all persons in whom any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold estates, or any other property or funds belonging to any parish, and held in trust for or applicable to the relief of the poor, or which may be applied in diminution of the poor-rate of such parish, shall be vested, or who shall be in the receipt of the rents, profits, or income of any such estate, property, or funds, a true and detailed account in writing of the place where such estate may be situate, or in what mode or on what security such other property or funds may be invested, with such details of the rents, profits, and income thereof, and of the appropriation of the same, and of all such other particulars relating thereto, as the said commissioners may direct and require; and such statement or a true copy thereof shall, under the regulations of the said commissioners, be open for the inspection of the owners of property and rate-payers in such parish: provided always, that nothing herein-before contained shall apply to any funds raised from time to time by the voluntary contributions of the inhabitants of any parish. Relief under suspended order not to be recoverable unless notice sent of such order.

86. And be it further enacted, that no advertisement inserted by or under the direction of the said commissioners in the London Gazette or any newspaper, for the purpose of carrying into effect any provisions of this act, nor any mortgage, bond, instrument, or any assignment thereof, given by way of security in pursuance of the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners, and conformable thereto, nor any contract or agreement, or appointment of any officer, made or entered into in pursuance of such rules, orders, or regulations, and conformable thereto, nor any other instrument made in pursuance of this act, nor the appointment of any paid officer engaged in the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, or in the management or collection of the poor-rate, shall be charged or chargeable with any stamp duty whatever. Power to call for and publish accounts of trust and charity estates.

87. And whereas by an act passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," the visitor and guardian of the poor of any parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the provisions of the said recited act, are authorized thereby to borrow money at interest for the purposes mentioned in the said act, and to secure Advertisements, &c. not liable to stamp duty.

Bonds and securities made pursuant to 22 G. 3, c. 83, and assignments thereof, exempted from stamp duty.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

such money by a charge upon the poor's rates of such parish, township, or place, in sums not exceeding fifty pounds each, in a certain form contained in the schedule to the said act, or to that or to the like effect, and which security is directed and allowed to be assigned by indorsement on the back thereof in a certain form also contained in the said schedule, or to that or the like effect: and whereas doubts have arisen touching the liability of such securities as aforesaid, and the assignments or transfers thereof to stamp duty, and it is expedient to remove the same; be it therefore enacted and declared, that no bond or other security at any time heretofore or to be at any time hereafter made or entered into in pursuance of the said recited act, nor any assignment or transfer thereof, shall be charged or chargeable with, or be deemed to be or to have been subject or liable to any stamp duty whatsoever; any thing in any act contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

Letters to and from board of commissioners to be free of postage, if sent conformable hereto.

88. And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners shall and may receive and send by the general post from and to places within the United Kingdom, all letters and packets relating solely and exclusively to the execution of this act free from the duty of postage, provided that such letters and packets as shall be sent to the said commissioners be directed to the "Poor Law Commissioners" at their office in London, and that all such letters and packets as shall be sent by the said commissioners shall be in covers, with the words "Office of Poor Law Commissioners, pursuant to Act of Parliament passed in the fifth year of the reign of his majesty King William the Fourth," printed on the same, and be signed on the outside thereof, under such words, with the name of such person as the said commissioners, with the consent of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, or any three or more of them, shall authorize and appoint, in his own handwriting, (such name to be from time to time transmitted to the secretaries of the General Post-office in London and Dublin,) and be sealed with the seal of the said commissioners, and under such other regulations and restrictions as the said Lords Commissioners, or any three or more of them, shall think proper and direct: and the person so to be authorized is hereby strictly forbidden so to subscribe or seal any letter or packet whatever, except such only concerning which he shall receive the special direction of his superior officer, or which he shall himself know to relate solely and exclusively to the execution of this act; and if the person so to be authorized, or any other person, shall send or cause or permit to be sent under any such cover, any letter, paper, or writing, or any enclosure, other than what shall relate to the execution of this act, every person so offending shall forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds, and be dismissed from his office; one moiety of the said penalty to the use of his majesty, his heirs and successors, and the other moiety to the use of the person who shall inform or sue for the same, to be sued for and recovered in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster for offences committed in England, and in any of his Majesty's courts of record in Dublin for offences committed in Ireland, and before the sheriff or stewartry court of the shire or stewartry within which the party offending shall reside, or the offence shall be committed, for offences committed in Scotland; and if any letter, paper, or writing, or other enclosure, shall be sent under cover to the said commissioners, the same not relating solely and exclusively to the execution of this act, they are hereby strictly required and enjoined to transmit the same forthwith to the secretary of the Post-office in London, with the covers under which the same shall be sent, in order that the contents thereof may be charged with the full rates of postage.

Letters sent under cover not relating solely to the business of the act to be transmitted to post office to be charged.

Payments contrary to this act to be disallowed.

89. And be it further enacted, that all payments, charges, and allowances made by any overseer or guardian, and charged upon the rates for the relief of the poor, contrary to the provisions of this act, or at variance with any rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners made under the authority of this act, shall be and the same are hereby declared to be illegal, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding; and every justice of the peace is hereby required to disallow as illegal and unfounded all payments, charges, or allowances contrary to the provisions of this act, or to any such rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners, which shall be contained in any account of any overseer of the poor or guardian which shall be presented for the purpose of being passed or allowed: provided always, that no allowance by any justice shall exonerate or discharge such overseer or guardian from any penalty or legal proceeding to which he may have rendered himself liable by having acted contrary to the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners, or to the provisions of this act.

Service of summons.

90. And be it further enacted, that the leaving of any summons authorized to be issued by any commissioner, assistant commissioner, or justice of the peace, under this act, at the usual or last known place of abode of the party to whom such sum mons shall be directed, shall in every case be deemed good and sufficient service of such summons. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

91. And be it further enacted, that so much of an act made and passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty king George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to repeal the Duties payable in respect of the Spirits distilled in England, and of Licenses for distilling, rectifying, or compounding such Spirits, and for the Sale of Spirits, and to impose other Duties in lieu thereof, and to provide other Regulations for the Collection of the said Duties, and for the Sale of Spirits, and for the warehousing of such Spirits without Payment of Duty for Exportation," as provides that if any master or officer of any workhouse shall sell, use, lend, or give away, or knowingly permit or suffer any spirits to be sold, used, lent, or given away, in any such workhouse, or brought into the same, other than and except such spirits as shall be prescribed or given by the prescription and direction of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, and to be supplied in pursuance of such prescriptions from the shop of some apothecary, every such master or such other officer shall for every such offence forfeit one hundred pounds, and for the second like offence lose his office; and so much of the said last-mentioned act as provides that no person shall carry or bring, or attempt to endeavour to carry or bring, any spirits, except to be used in the way of medicine, into any workhouse, under the pain of being imprisoned for every such offence for any time not exceeding three months; and also so much of the said last-mentioned act as provides that every master and chief officer of every workhouse shall procure one or more copy or copies of the clauses in the said act mentioned to be printed or fairly written and hung up in one of the most public places in the workhouse, and renew the same from time to time, so that it may be always kept fair and legible, on pain of forfeiting the sum of ten pounds for every wilful default; or as enables any justice of the peace to demand a sight of such copy so hung up in some public place, to convict such master or officer of such default; shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Repeal of so much of 6 G. 4, c. 80, as relates to prohibition of spirituous liquors in workhouses.

92. And be it further enacted, that if any person shall carry, bring, or introduce, or attempt or endeavour to carry, bring, or introduce, into any workhouse now or hereafter to be established, any spirituous or fermented liquors, without the order in writing of the master of such workhouse, it shall be lawful for the master of such workhouse, or any officer of the same acting under his direction, to apprehend or cause to be apprehended such offender, and to carry him or her before a justice of the peace, who is hereby empowered to hear and determine such offence in a summary way; and upon conviction thereof the party so offending shall forfeit and pay any sum of money not exceeding ten pounds for every such offence, as such justice may direct; and in default of payment of the penalty hereby imposed such justice may and is hereby required to commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the district in which such workhouse shall be situate, for any space of time not exceeding two calendar months, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid.

Penalty on persons introducing spirituous liquors into workhouses.

93. And be it further enacted, that if any master of a workhouse shall order any spirituous or fermented liquor to be carried, brought, or introduced into any workhouse, except for the domestic use of himself or of any officer of the said workhouse, or their respective families, or except by and under the written authority of the surgeon of such workhouse, or of any justice visiting the same, or of the guardians of such workhouse, or in conformity with any rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners; or if any such master or any other officer of any workhouse shall carry, bring, or introduce into such workhouse, or sell, use, lend, or give away therein, or knowingly permit or suffer to be carried, brought, or introduced, or sold, used, lent, or given away therein, any spirituous or fermented liquor, contrary to the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners; or shall punish with any corporal punishment any adult person in such workhouse, or confine any such person for any offence or misbehaviour for any longer space of time than twenty-four hours, or such further space of time as may be necessary in order to have such person carried before a justice of the peace; or shall in any way abuse or ill-treat, or be guilty of any other misbehaviour, or otherwise misconduct himself towards or with respect to any poor person in such workhouse; every such master or officer of a workhouse so offending shall for every such offence, upon the complaint of the overseers or guardians of the parish or union to which such workhouse shall belong, or of any such poor person, and upon conviction of such offence before any two justices, forfeit and pay such sum of money, not being more than twenty pounds, as such justices may direct; and in default of payment of the penalty hereby imposed, such justices may and are hereby required to commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the district in Penalty on masters of workhouses allowing use of spirituous liquors, or ill-treating poor persons, or misconducting himself.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

Power for justices to order salaries, &c. to be stopped, and applied towards payment of penalties.

* sic.

Masters to hang up copies of two preceding clauses in workhouse.

Penalties on overseers and other officers disobeying guardians.

No overseer to be prosecuted for not executing illegal orders of justices.

Penalty on overseers, &c. purloining, &c. goods, &c. 20l. and treble the value of goods purloined.

Penalty on persons wilfully disobeying rules, orders, and regulations.

Forfeitures, costs, and charges may be levied by distress and sale.

which such parish shall be situate for any space of time not exceeding six calendar months, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid: provided always, that if at the time when any such master or officer of a workhouse shall be so convicted of any such offence, there shall be due to him any sum of money or salary in respect of his employment as such master or officer of such workhouse, or upon any balance of account from the overseers or guardians of the parish or union to which such workhouse shall belong, it shall be lawful for such justices, upon the application of such overseers or guardians, by order in writing under their hand, to direct that such* of money, salary, or balance, so far as the same shall extend, or a sufficient part thereof, shall be retained and applied for the use of such parish or union by such overseer or guardians, in payment or part payment of any such penalty, and such order shall be a good and valid discharge to such overseers or guardians for so much money as may by such order be directed to be so retained and applied against the claim or demand of the master or other officer of such workhouse in respect of any such sum of money, salary, or balance.

94. And be it further enacted, that the master of every workhouse shall cause one or more copy or copies of the two preceding clauses to be printed or fairly written, and hung up in one of the most public places in such workhouse, and renew the same from time to time, so that it always be kept fair and legible, on pain of forfeiting the sum of ten pounds for every wilful default.

95. And be it further enacted, that in case any overseer, assistant overseer, master of a workhouse, or other officer of any parish or union, shall wilfully disobey the legal and reasonable order of such justices and guardians in carrying the rules, orders, and regulations of the said commissioners or assistant commissioners, or the provisions of this act, into execution, every such offender shall, upon conviction before any two justices, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding five pounds.

96. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that no overseer shall from henceforth be liable to any prosecution or penalty for not carrying into execution any illegal order of such justices or guardians, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

97. And be it further enacted, that if any overseer, assistant overseer, master of a workhouse, or other paid officer, or any other person employed by or under the authority of the said guardians, shall purloin, embezzle, or wilfully waste or misapply any of the monies, goods, or chattels belonging to any parish or union, every such offender shall, besides and in addition to such pains and penalties as such person so offending shall, independently of this act, be liable to, upon conviction before any two justices, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty pounds, and also treble the amount or value of such money, goods, or chattels so purloined, embezzled, wasted, or misapplied; and every person so convicted shall be for ever thereafter incapable of serving any office under the provisions of this or any other act in relation to the relief of the poor.

98. And be it further enacted, that in case any person shall wilfully neglect or disobey any of the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners or assistant commissioners, or be guilty of any contempt of the said commissioners sitting as a board, such person shall, upon conviction before any two justices, forfeit and pay for the first offence any sum not exceeding five pounds, for the second offence any sum not exceeding twenty pounds nor less than five pounds, and in the event of such person being convicted a third time, such third and every subsequent offence shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and such offender shall be liable to be indicted for the same offence, and shall on conviction pay such fine, not being less than twenty pounds, and suffer such imprisonment, with or without hard labour, as may be awarded against him by the court, by or before which he shall be tried and convicted.

99. And be it further enacted, that all penalties and forfeitures by this act inflicted or authorized to be imposed for any offence against the same, shall, upon proof and conviction of the offences respectively before any two justices, either by the confession of the party offending, or by the oath of any credible witness or witnesses, (which oath such justices are in every case hereby fully authorized to administer,) or upon order made as aforesaid, be levied, together with the costs attending the information, summons, and conviction, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or person liable or ordered to pay the same respectively, by warrant under the hands of the justices before whom the party may have been convicted, or, on proof of such conviction, by a warrant under the hands of any two justices acting for the county, riding, or division (which warrant such justices are hereby empowered and required to grant); and the overplus (if any), after such penalties and forfeitures, and the charges of such distress and sale, are deducted, shall be returned, upon demand, unto the owner or owners of such goods and chattels; and in case such fines, penalties, and forfeitures shall not be forthwith paid upon conviction, then it shall be lawful for such justices as aforesaid to order the offender or offenders so convicted to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to such warrant of distress, unless the offender or offenders shall give sufficient security, to the satisfaction of such justices as aforesaid, for his or their appearance before such justices on such day or days as shall be appointed for the return of such warrant of distress, such day or days not being more than seven days from the time of taking any such security, and which security the said justices as aforesaid are hereby empowered to take by way of recognizance or otherwise; but if upon the return of such warrant it shall appear that no sufficient distress can be had thereupon, then it shall be lawful for any such justices as aforesaid, as the case may be, and they are hereby authorized and required, by warrant or warrants under their hands, to cause such offender or offenders to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, riding, or place where the offender shall be or reside, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for any term not exceeding three calendar months, unless such penalties and forfeitures, and all reasonable charges attending the same, shall be sooner paid and satisfied; and the penalties and forfeitures, when so levied, shall be paid to or for the use of the parish or union where such offence shall have been committed, to be applied in aid of the poor rate of such parish or union.

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

In what manner to be applied.

100. And be it further enacted, that no owner of property, ratepayer, or inhabitant of any parish or union shall be deemed an incompetent witness in any proceeding for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture inflicted or imposed for any offence against this act, notwithstanding such penalty or forfeiture, when recovered, shall be applicable in aid of the poor rate of such parish or union.

Owners, ratepayers, &c. may be competent witnesses.

101. And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which any penalty or forfeiture is recoverable before the justices of the peace under this act it shall and may be lawful for any commissioner or assistant commissioner, or any justice, to whom complaint in writing shall be made of any such offence, to summon the party complained against to appear before any two justices, and on such summons the said two justices may hear and determine the matter of such complaint, and on proof of the offence convict the offender, and adjudge him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and proceed to recover the same.

Justices may proceed by summons for the recovery of penalties.

102. And be it further enacted, that where any distress shall be made for any sum of money to be levied by virtue of this act the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any default or want of form in any proceedings relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity which shall afterwards happen in making the distress, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action on the case: provided always, that no plaintiff shall recover in any action for any irregularity, trespass, or wrongful proceedings, if tender of sufficient amends shall be made, by or on behalf of the party who shall have committed or caused to be committed any such irregularity, trespass, or wrongful proceedings, before such action shall have been brought; and in case no such tender shall have been made it shall and may be lawful for the defendant in any such action, by leave of the court where such action shall depend, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall see fit, whereupon such proceedings, or orders and judgment, shall be had, made, and given in and by such court as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court.

Satisfaction recoverable for special damage, but distress not unlawful for want of form in the proceedings.

Plaintiff not to recover for irregularity, if tender of amends be made.

103. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that if any person or persons shall find himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by any order or conviction of any justice or justices, where such person or persons shall be convicted in any penalty or penalties exceeding five pounds, or if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any order made under the provisions of this act on such person as the putative father of any bastard child, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to appeal to any general or quarter sessions of the peace to be held in and for the county, riding, or division in which such order shall have been made or conviction taken place within four calendar months next after the cause of complaint shall have arisen, or if such session shall be held before the expiration of one calendar month next after such cause of complaint, then such appeal shall be made to the next following sessions, either of which court of sessions is hereby empowered to hear and finally determine the matter of the said appeal, and to make such order therein as to them shall seem meet; which order shall be final and conclusive to and upon all parties; provided that the person or persons so appealing shall give or cause to be given at least fourteen days' notice in writing of his, her, or their intention of appealing as aforesaid, and of the matter or cause thereof, to the respondent or respondents, and within five days after such notice shall enter into a recognizance before some justice of the peace, with sufficient securities, conditioned to try such appeal at the then next general sessions or quarter sessions of the peace which shall first happen; and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices, at such quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof; and such justices, upon hearing and finally determining such matter of appeal, shall and may, according to their discretion, award such costs to the party appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper; and their determination in or concerning the premises shall be conclusive and binding on all parties to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

104. And be it further enacted, that no action or suit shall be commenced against any commissioner, assistant commissioner, or any other person, for anything done in pursuance of or under the authority of this act, until twenty-one days' notice has been given thereof in writing to the party or person against whom such action is intended to be brought, nor after sufficient satisfaction or tender thereof shall have been made to the party aggrieved, nor after three calendar months next after the act committed for which such action or suit shall be so brought; and every such action shall be brought, laid, and tried where the cause of action shall have arisen, and not in any other county or place; and the defendant in such action or suit may plead the general issue, and give this act and any special matter in evidence, at any trial which shall be had thereupon; and if the matter or thing shall appear to have been done under or by virtue of this act, or if it shall appear that such action or suit was brought before twenty-one days' notice thereof given as aforesaid, or that sufficient satisfaction was made or tendered as aforesaid, or if any action or suit shall not be commenced within the time before limited, or shall be laid in any other county than as aforesaid, then the jury shall find a verdict for the defendant therein; and if a verdict shall be found for such defendant, or if the plaintiff in such action or suit shall become nonsuit, or suffer a discontinuance of such action, or if, upon any demurrer in such action, judgment shall be given for the defendant therein, then and in any of the cases aforesaid, such defendant shall have costs, charges and expenses, as between attorney and client, and shall have such remedy for recovering the same as any defendant may have for his or her costs in any other case by law.

105. And be it further enacted, that no rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners or assistant commissioners, or any of them, shall be removed or removable by writ of certiorari into any court of record, except his Majesty's Court of King's Bench at Westminster; and that every rule, order, or regulation which shall be removed by writ of certiorari into the said Court of King's Bench, shall, nevertheless, unless and until the same shall be declared illegal by that court, continue in full force and virtue, and be obeyed, performed, and enforced, in such and the same manner, and by such and the same ways and means, as if the same had not been so removed.

106. And be it further enacted, that no application shall be made for any writ of certiorari for the removal of any such rule, order, or regulation, except to the judges when sitting in the said court, nor unless notice in writing shall have been left at the office of the said commissioners at least ten days previous to such application being made, and in which notice shall be set forth the name and description of the party by or on behalf of whom and the day on which it is intended to make such application, together with a statement of the grounds thereof; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to show cause in the first instance against such application, and the court may, if it shall so think fit, forthwith proceed to hear and determine the same upon the grounds set forth in such notice.

107. And be it further enacted, that previous to any writ of certiorari being issued, the party or parties applying for the same shall enter into a recognizance, with sufficient sureties, before one of his Majesty's justices of the Court of King's Bench, or before a justice of the peace of the county or place in which such person shall reside, in the sum of fifty pounds, with condition to prosecute the same, at his or their costs and charges, with effect, without any wilful or affected delay, and in default thereof, or in the event of such rule, order, or regulation being deemed legal, to pay the said commissioners their full costs, charges, and expenses, to be taxed according to the course of the said Court of King's Bench; and if the said rule, order, or regulation, so removed by the said writ of certiorari into the said Court of King's Bench, shall be declared legal by the said court, the commissioners entitled to such costs, within ten days after demand made of the person or persons who ought to pay the said costs, upon oath made of the making such demand and refusal of payment thereof, may recover the same in the same manner as any penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76.

108. And be it further enacted, that if upon the hearing of the application the court shall order a writ of certiorari to issue for bringing up any such rule, order, or regulation, and the same, being brought into court, shall be quashed as illegal, the said commissioners shall forthwith notify the judgment of the court to all unions, parishes, or places to which such rule, order, or regulation shall have been directed, and the same shall from the time of receiving such notice respectively be deemed and taken to be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided, that such judgment shall not have the effect of annulling any contracts made in pursuance or upon the authority of any such rule, order, or regulation, which at the receipt of such notice respectively shall have been executed by either of the contracting parties: provided also, that no person shall be liable to be prosecuted, either by indictment or by civil action, for or in respect of any act done by him before the receipt of such notice, under the authority and in pursuance of such rule, order, or regulation.

If rules are quashed, the same to be notified to parishes to which such rules have been directed.

Proviso for existing contracts.

No person to be answerable until receipt of notice.

109. And be it further enacted, that in the construction of this act the word "auditor" shall be construed to mean and include every person, other than justices of the peace acting in virtue of their office, appointed or empowered to audit, control, examine, allow, or disallow the accounts of any guardian, overseer, or vestrymen relating to the receipt or expenditure of the poor rate; the words "general rule" shall be construed to mean any rule relating to the management of the poor or to the execution of this act which shall at the time of issuing the same be addressed by the said commissioners to more than one union, or to more parishes or places than one not forming a union, or not to be formed into or added to a union under or by virtue of such rule; the word "guardian" shall be construed to mean and include any visitor, governor, director, manager, acting guardian, vestryman, or other officer in a parish or union, appointed or entitled to act as a manager of the poor, and in the distribution or ordering of the relief to the poor from the poor rate, under any general or local act of parliament; the words "justice or justices of the peace" shall be construed to include justices of the peace of any county, division of a county, riding, borough, liberty, division of a liberty, precinct, county of a city, county of a town, cinque port, or town corporate, unless where otherwise provided by this act; the word "oath" shall be construed to include the affirmation of a Quaker, Separatist, or Moravian; the words "orders and regulations" shall be construed to mean and include any rule, order, regulation, or bye-law relating to the management or relief of the poor, or the execution of this act, which at the time of issuing the same shall be addressed, directed, or applied to any one parish or union, or to any number of parishes which have been or by virtue of any order shall be constituted a union or added to a union; the word "officer" shall be construed to extend to any clergyman, schoolmaster, person duly licensed to practise as a medical man, vestry clerk, treasurer, collector, assistant overseer, governor, master or mistress of a workhouse, or any other person who shall be employed in any parish or union in carrying this act or the laws for the relief of the poor into execution, and whether performing one or more of the above-mentioned functions; the word "overseer" shall be construed to mean and include overseers of the poor, churchwardens, so far as they are authorized or required by law to act in the management or relief of the poor, or in the collection or distribution of the poor rate, assistant overseer, or any other subordinate officer, whether paid or unpaid, in any parish or union, who shall be employed therein in carrying this act or the laws for the relief of the poor into execution; the word "owner" shall be construed to include any person for the time being in the actual occupation of any property rateable to the relief of the poor, and not let to him at rack rent, or any person receiving the rack rent of any such property, either on his own account or as mortgagee or other incumbrancer in possession; and the words "rack rent" shall be construed to mean any rent which shall not be less than two-thirds of the full improved net annual value of any property; the word "parish" shall be construed to include any parish, city, borough, town, township, liberty, precinct, vill, village, hamlet, tithing, chapelry, or any other place, or division or district of a place, maintaining its own poor, whether parochial or extra-parochial; the word "person" shall be construed to include any body politic, corporate, or collegiate, aggregate or sole, as well as any individual; the word "poor" shall be construed to include any pauper or poor or indigent person applying for or receiving relief from the poor rate in England or Wales, or chargeable thereto; the words "poor law," or "laws for the relief of the poor," shall be construed to include every act

5 & 6 WILL. IV. CAP. 69.

An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Workhouses and other Property of Parishes and of Incorporations or Unions of Parishes in England and Wales.
[9th September, 1835.]

WHEREAS there are certain legal difficulties attending the title, purchase, sale, and disposal of property, which, with respect to workhouses and other property belonging to parishes, incorporations, or unions, it is expedient to remove; and it is also expedient to simplify the assurances for the conveyance, exchange, or transfer of such property: be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners of the King's Majesty's woods, forests, and land revenues, by and with the consent in writing of the lord high treasurer, or the commissioners of his Majesty's treasury, or any three or more of them, and for his Majesty, by any grant signed by the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, and for the Duke of Cornwall, by any grant signed by the chancellor of that duchy, to grant, and for the guardians and overseers of the poor of any parish or union of parishes, under the direction and with the approbation of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales (to be testified by order under their hands and seal), and for any lay or ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or sole, and for any feoffees or trustees to charitable or other uses, and for any person beneficially seised or entitled in possession as tenant in fee simple, or in fee tail, general or special, or for his own life, or for years determinable on his own life, (such estate for life or years not being subject to any rent,) or for any term of years in gross whereof not less than four hundred shall be unexpired, and subject to no equity of redemption or rent, except a nominal rent, and for any married woman entitled or interested as aforesaid to her separate use, and for the guardian, trustee, husband, or committee of any person so seised or entitled who shall be an infant, married woman (not separately entitled), idiot, lunatic, or under any other disability, to dispose of,

by way of absolute sale, or in exchange for any messuages, lands, or other hereditaments, any lands or buildings for the purpose of the same being used as or converted into a workhouse, or of being used as the site of a workhouse, or of being occupied with a workhouse, or for any other purpose relating to the relief of the poor which the said poor law commissioners may approve of, with the rights and appurtenances, and to convey the same and the fee simple and inheritance thereof unto the guardians or overseers of any union or parish and their successors, or in such other manner as the said poor law commissioners may direct, and to accept from and give to such guardians or overseers any monies by way of equality of exchange.

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 69.

2. And with regard to the application of money paid for the purchase or on the exchange of hereditaments of persons under disability; be it enacted, that all sums of money which shall be agreed to be paid to any corporation, or to any trustee, guardian, or committee for or on behalf of any infant, ward, lunatic, idiot, married woman, or other person under disability, or to any person whose lands shall be limited in settlement, for the purchase or exchange of hereditaments as aforesaid, shall, in case the same shall exceed the sum of fifty pounds, and there shall be no person capable of giving a sufficient discharge for the same, be paid by the said guardians and overseers into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the accountant general of the Court of Exchequer, to be placed in his account to the credit of the party who shall be so interested in the said hereditaments, describing them, subject to the order of the said court of exchequer; which said court, on the petition of or motion on behalf of any corporation or person making claim to any such money, is hereby empowered to order summarily the investment of such money in the purchase of real estates, to be settled to the same uses and upon the same trusts as the lands so sold were previously subject to, or in the public funds, and the distribution of the rents and dividends thereof respectively, according to the respective interests of the claimants thereof, and to make such other order in the premises as to the court shall seem reasonable; and the cashier of the Bank of England who shall receive such money shall give a receipt to the party paying the same, specifying for what the same is received, which receipt shall be to all intents and purposes a sufficient discharge; and upon such receipt being given it shall be lawful for the said poor law commissioners, by order under their hands and seals, to direct that the said hereditaments so purchased by such guardians or overseers shall be appropriated for the purposes of this act; and in case of doubts or questions of title to any money paid into the Bank of England by virtue of this act, or the securities on which the same may be invested, or the dividends or interest thereof, the corporation or person who shall have been in the possession of such hereditaments, interests, or incumbrances at the time of such purchase, and persons claiming under them, shall be deemed and taken to be lawfully entitled to such hereditaments, interests, or incumbrances until the contrary shall be shown to the satisfaction of the said Court of Exchequer; and the securities and principal and interest monies shall be applied and disposed of accordingly; and in case of such purchase, payment into the Bank of England, and application to the Court of Exchequer as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the expenses attending such purchase, payment, or application, or any part thereof, to be paid by such guardians or overseers, who shall accordingly pay the same as and when the said court shall direct, and the money so paid shall be a charge on the poor rates of such parish or such union, as the case may be.

Investment of purchase money to the same uses as the estates sold were subject to.

Parties in possession to be deemed entitled.

Court of Exchequer may order payment of expenses.

3. And in order to ensure the due application of the property of parishes and unions, be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the guardians of any parish or union, and for the overseers of any parish not under the management of a board of guardians, and for the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee of any dissolved union, or the person or persons who were the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee of any dissolved union at the time of its dissolution, or a majority of such guardians, trustees, or persons, if more than one, with the approbation, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the poor law commissioners, to sell, exchange, let, or otherwise to dispose of any workhouses, tenements, buildings, land, effects, or other property belonging to any such parish or union, or vested in trustees or feoffees in trust for such parish or union, or for the parishioners, rate-payers, or inhabitants thereof, or which belong or did belong to any dissolved union, and every and any part of such property, and to convey, assign, or transfer the same accordingly to the purchasers or parties exchanging, as they shall direct; and, in case of a sale, to apply the produce arising therefrom (after deducting the reasonable expenses thereof) towards the purchase or building of any workhouse, or as or in part of the proportion of such parish or union towards the expense of any workhouse erected,

Power to overseers and guardians of the poor to sell, purchase, and dispose of workhouses, &c.

- 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 69. purchased, or provided on behalf of such parish or union, or as a loan to the board of guardians of such union, upon the security of the rates, for the purpose of erecting a workhouse, or in liquidation of any debt contracted by such parish or union or dissolved union, or in such other manner for the permanent advantage of such parish or union or dissolved union as the said poor law commissioners may approve; and in case of an exchange, the hereditaments to be taken in exchange shall be conveyed to the guardians of such parish or union, or the overseers of such parish, upon the same trusts, and the rents and profits thereof shall be applied to the same purposes, as the hereditaments given in exchange were held, and the rents and profits thereof would have been applicable under the provisions of the law or of this act if the same hereditaments had not been exchanged; and it shall be lawful for the said poor law commissioners to direct the mode and proportions on parishes in which any money required for the purchase of any such property shall be raised, paid, and secured, and also to direct the mode in which the persons by whom, and the objects relating to the management of the poor to which, the rents, profits, beneficial occupation, or income of such property shall be applied, assigned, or distributed; and wheresoever the workhouse or workhouses of any parish in any union may have become or shall hereafter become convertible to the common use of such union, it shall be lawful for the said poor law commissioners to direct such an annual sum, in the nature of rent or other compensation, to be paid to such parish out of the common fund of the union, and to vary the amount of such annual sum or compensation from time to time as the said poor law commissioners shall see fit: provided always, that no such sale or exchange or letting of any workhouses, tenements, buildings, or land of any parish shall take place except with the consent of a majority of the rate-payers of such parish, and of the owners of property therein, entitled to vote under and by virtue of the act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present majesty, intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," assembled at a meeting to be duly convened and held for the purpose, after public notice of the time and place and purpose of holding such meeting shall have been given in like manner as notices of vestry meetings are published and given, such majority to be ascertained in manner provided by the said act: provided also, that every sale and exchange or lease of any such workhouse, tenements, buildings, land, or other property which may have been made before the passing of this act, with the consent or approbation in writing of the said poor law commissioners, shall be as valid and effectual as if the same had been directed by their order under the authority of this act; and that any monies or rents which have become or shall become payable in respect of any such sale, exchange, or lease, and have not been applied, shall be applied in the same manner as such monies or rents would have been applicable if such sale or exchange or lease had been made under this act.
- 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76. 4. And be it further enacted, that all the powers and authorities in and by an act passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," given to guardians of the poor for or relating to the inclosing of any part or portion of waste or common land as therein mentioned; and all powers and authorities in and by an act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the same reign, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor," given to churchwardens and overseers of the poor for taking land or ground into their hands, and for purchasing, hiring, and taking on lease any land; and all the powers and authorities contained in an act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Fifty-ninth Year of His Majesty King George the Third, for the Relief and Employment of the Poor;" and in a certain other act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act to enable Churchwardens and Overseers to inclose Land belonging to the Crown for the Benefit of poor Persons residing in the Parish in which such Crown Land shall be situate;" and in a certain other act passed in the second year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act to authorize (in Parishes inclosed under any Act of Parliament) the letting of the Poor Allotments in small Portions to industrious Cottagers;" shall in future be exercised (under the control, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the poor law commissioners,) by the overseers of the poor in any parish not under the management of a board of guardians, and by the guardians of the poor of any union or parish formed or established by virtue of any statute or local act; and all the aforesaid powers and authorities relating to the inclosing, purchasing, hiring, or taking any waste, common, or other land, for the purpose or purposes in the said acts mentioned, shall extend and apply to and may be so exercised as aforesaid by the said overseers and guardians for the purpose of being used as the site of a workhouse, or of being occupied with a workhouse, or for any other of the purposes of the said recited act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present Majesty. 5 & 6 IV. 4, c. 69.

5. And be it further enacted, that the powers and authorities given by the said act of the fifty-ninth year of King George the Third, and by the said act of the second year of the present reign, to justices of the peace to cause possession of parish houses and lands and portions of land to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and any other auxiliary powers or provisions in the said acts or other acts contained in relation thereto, shall extend to and shall be exercised by such justices in respect of any houses and lands and portions of land which are or may be vested in or under the management or control of the guardians of the poor of any union or parish, in the same manner as if the name of those officers had been inserted in the said acts instead of the names of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor. Powers given to justices to deliver possession of parish houses, &c. to churchwardens and overseers, extended to property of unions, &c.

6. And, for simplifying the instruments of assurance of property under this act, be it enacted, that every conveyance, exchange, security, or assignment of security, under the authority of this act, may be made according to the forms set forth in the schedule annexed, or in such other forms as the said Poor Law Commissioners shall direct, or as near thereto as the number of parties, the nature of the interests, and the circumstances of the case will admit, and shall, when executed by the conveying parties, be valid and effectual in the law, without livery of seisin being made, or any bargain and sale to vest possession being executed; and that every conveyance, exchange, security, transfer of security, or instrument made under the authority of this act, shall, when signed by the conveying parties thereto, be transmitted to the said Poor Law Commissioners, who shall, if they shall approve thereof, signify such approval by sealing or stamping the same with their seal; and for preserving evidence of such instruments the said Commissioners shall keep a register, properly indexed, in which they shall insert copies or memorials of such deeds or instruments of which they shall so approve, and of such orders of appropriation of property as are herein-before mentioned; and all such copies or memorials, or copies thereof, purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the said Commissioners, shall be received as evidence of the instruments respectively of which they purport to be copies or memorials. Mode of conveyance.

7. And, for the more easy execution of the purposes of this act, and of the laws relating to the poor, be it enacted, that the guardians of the poor of every union already formed or which hereafter shall be formed by virtue of the aforesaid act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present Majesty, and of every parish placed under the control of a board of guardians by virtue of the said act, shall respectively from the day of their first meeting as a board become or be deemed to have become, and they and their successors in office shall for ever continue to be, for all the purposes of this act, a corporation, by the name of the Guardians of the Poor of the Union (or of the Parish of) in the County of ; and as such corporation the said guardians are hereby empowered to accept, take, and hold, for the benefit of such union or parish, any buildings, lands, or hereditaments, goods, effects, or other property, and may use a common seal; and they are further empowered by that name to bring actions, to prefer indictments, and to sue and be sued, and to take or resist all other proceedings for or in relation to any such property, or any bonds, contracts, securities, or instruments given or to be given to them in virtue of their office; and in every such action and indictment relating to any such property it shall be sufficient to lay or state the property to be that of the guardians of the union, or of the parish of ; and in case of any addition to or separation of any parishes from any such union, under the authority of the said act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present Majesty, the board of guardians for the time being shall (notwithstanding such alteration) have and enjoy the same corporate existence, property, and privileges as the board of guardians of the original union would have had and enjoyed had it remained unaltered. Approval of the poor law commissioners.

8. And be it enacted, that all buildings, lands, or hereditaments, goods, effects, or other property, which, before the passing of this act, may have been conveyed, with the consent or under the directions of the said Poor Law Commissioners, to any persons in trust for and for the use of any union or parishes, shall, without any further act, vest in the guardians thereof as such corporation in the same manner as if the same respectively had been conveyed to or vested in them under the provisions of this act. Guardians incorporated.

9. And in the interpretation of this act, be it enacted, that wherever in this act, in describing any person or party, matter or thing, the word importing the singular Previous sales made with the consent of the commissioners to be valid.

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 69. number or the masculine gender only is used, the same shall be understood to include and shall be applied to several persons or parties as well as one person or party, and females as well as males, and several matters or things as well as one matter or thing respectively, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; and the words and expressions "general rule," "guardian," "justice or justices of the peace," "orders and regulations," "overseers," "owners of property," "parish," "person," "poor," "poor rate," "union," "vestry," and "workhouse," shall bear and be construed to have the same signification as the same words and expressions are declared to have in the said act of the fourth and fifth years of the present reign, for the amendment and better administration of the laws relating to the poor in England and Wales.

[19th August, 1836.]

All rates to be made on the net annual value of the property.

Proviso.

Rates to be made in a given form.

Nothing herein to prevent owners from compounding for rates.

Power to order new survey and valuation.

Power for surveyors to enter and examine lands &c. for purposes of survey and plans.

WHEREAS it is desirable to establish one uniform mode of rating for the relief of the poor throughout England and Wales, and to lessen the cost of appeal against an unfair rate: Be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after such period, not being earlier than the twenty-first day of March next after the passing of this Act, as the Poor Law Commissioners shall by any order under their seal of office direct, no rate for the relief of the poor in England and Wales shall be allowed by any justices, or be of any force, which shall not be made upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto; that is to say, of the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter or affect the principles or different relative liabilities (if any) according to which different kinds of hereditaments are now by law rateable.

II. And be it further enacted, that every such rate made after the said period shall, in addition to any other particular which the form of making out such rate shall require to be set forth, contain an account of every particular set forth at the head of the respective columns in the forms given in the schedule to this Act annexed, so far as the same can be ascertained; and the churchwardens and overseers, or other officers whose duty it may be to make and levy the said rate, or such a number of the said churchwardens and overseers or other officers as are competent to the making and levying of the same, shall, before the rate is allowed by the justices, sign the declaration given at the foot of the said form; and otherwise the said rate shall be of no force or validity: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the owners of tenements from compounding for the rates to be assessed on the same, in such manner as they were by any statute or statutes enabled to do before the passing of this Act, so that the gross estimated rental of the hereditaments compounded for be entered on the rate in the proper column.

III. And be it enacted, that when it shall be made to appear to the poor law commissioners by representation in writing from the board of guardians of any union or parish under their common seal, or from the majority of the churchwardens and overseers or other officers competent as aforesaid to the making and levying the rate, that a fair and correct estimate for the aforesaid purposes cannot be made without a new valuation, it shall be lawful for the Poor Law Commissioners, where they shall see fit, to order a survey, with or without a map or plan, on such scale as they shall think fit, to be made and taken of the messuages, lands, and other hereditaments liable to poor rates in such parish, or in all or any one or more parishes of such a union, and a valuation to be made of the said messuages, lands, and other hereditaments according to their annual value, and to direct such guardians to appoint a fit person or persons to make and take every such survey, map or plan, and valuation, and to make provision for paying the costs of every such survey, map or plan, and valuation, either by a separate rate or by a charge on the poor rates, as they may see fit; but in case of such charge being made, then provisions shall be made for paying off not less than one fifth of the sum charged on the rates, and such interest as may from time to time be payable in respect of such charge or any part thereof, in each succeeding year, till the whole is repaid.

IV. And be it further enacted, that for the purpose of making every such survey, map or plan, and valuation, it shall be lawful for the person or persons so to be appointed for making the same respectively, together with their and every of their assistants and servants, at all reasonable times, until the same respectively shall be completed, to enter, view, and examine, survey and admeasure, all and every part of the messuages, lands, and other hereditaments aforesaid, and to do or cause to be done any act or thing necessary for making such survey, map or plan, and valuation: provided always, that any map, survey, plan, or valuation made previously to the appointment of such person or persons which shall be tendered to him or them, and which shall be in his or their judgment and to his or their satisfaction a just and true map or survey, proper for the purposes aforesaid, may be used for such purposes. 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 96.

V. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any person or persons rated to the relief of the poor of the parish in respect of which any rate shall be made, at all seasonable times, to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom without paying any thing for the same, any thing in any act of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding; and in case the person or persons having the custody of such rate shall refuse to permit, or shall not permit such person or persons so rated as aforesaid to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom, the person or persons so refusing or not permitting such copy or extract to be made shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds, to be recovered in a summary way before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the parish or place. Power to take copies or extracts of rates gratis. Penalty for refusal to permit.

VI. And be it enacted, that the justices acting in and for every petty sessions division shall four times at least in every year hold a special sessions for hearing appeals against the rates of the several parishes within their respective divisions, and shall cause public notice of the time and place when and where such special sessions will be holden to be affixed to or near to the door of the parish church of the said parishes, twenty-eight days at the least before the holding of the same; and such special sessions shall and may be adjourned from time to time by the justices there present, as they may think fit; and at such special or adjourned sessions the justices there present shall hear and determine all objections to any such rate on the ground of inequality, unfairness, or incorrectness in the valuation of any hereditaments included therein, which decision shall be binding and conclusive on the parties, unless the person or persons impugning such decision shall within fourteen days after the same shall have been made cause notice to be given in writing of his, her, or their intention of appealing against such decision, and of the matter or cause of such appeal (a), to the person or persons in whose favour such decision shall have been made, and within five days after giving such notice shall enter into a recognizance before some justice of the peace, with sufficient securities, conditioned to try such appeal at the then next general sessions or quarter sessions of the peace which shall first happen, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof; and such justices, upon hearing and finally determining such matter of appeal, shall and may, according to their discretion, award such costs to the party or parties appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper, and their determination in or concerning the premises shall be conclusive and binding on all parties, to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided always, that no such objection shall be inquired into by the said justices in special session unless notice of such objection in writing under the hand of the complainant shall have been given, seven days at least before the day appointed for such special session, to the collector, overseers, or other persons by whom such rate was made; provided also, that the said justices in special session shall not be authorized to inquire into the liability of any hereditaments to be rated, but only into the true value thereof and into the fairness of the amount at which the same shall have been rated. Justices acting in petty sessions to hold four special sessions in the year to hear appeals. (a) Seven days notice to be given of objections.

VII. And be it enacted, that the justices present at any such special or adjourned session shall for the aforesaid purpose have all the powers of amending or quashing any such rate so objected to of any parish or other district within their division, and likewise of awarding costs to be paid by or to any of the parties, and of recovering such costs, which any court of quarter sessions of the peace has upon appeals from any such rate, except as herein excepted: provided always, that no order of the said justices shall be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster: provided also, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to deprive any person or persons of the right to appeal against any rate to any court of general or quarter sessions: provided also, that no order of the said justices in special session shall be of any force pending any appeal touching the same subject matter to the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace having jurisdiction to try such appeal, or in opposition to the order of any such court upon such appeal. Proviso. Justices may act with all the powers of justices in quarter sessions.

VIII. And be it enacted, that this Act shall extend only to England and Wales. Act confined to England and Wales.

IX. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be repealed or amended by any act which shall be passed in this session. Act may be repealed this session.

An Act to extend the Period for the Repayment of Loans made under an Act passed in the Fourth and Fifth Year of his present Majesty, for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales. [20th August, 1836.]

WHEREAS by an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," it is enacted, that when any sum of money shall have been borrowed for certain purposes therein mentioned, the principal sum shall be repaid by annual instalments of not less than one tenth of the sum borrowed, with interest on the same, in any one year: and whereas several loans have been made by the Exchequer Loan Commissioners and by private persons to divers parishes and unions, the amount whereof or of a large part thereof is still due, and it is expedient that authority should be given in certain cases to allow a longer period for the repayment of such money: be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that when any money shall have been so borrowed by any parish or union under the direction or with the sanction of the Poor Law Commissioners, it shall be lawful for the Exchequer Loan Commissioners, with the approbation of the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury or of any three or more of them, or for any private persons, if they shall see fit, to extend the repayment of the principal sum borrowed under the provisions of the said recited act, and then remaining due, to such a period as calculating from the date of the charge on the poor rates of such parish or union would extend the repayment thereof to a period not exceeding twenty years instead of ten years, as provided for by the said recited act; and in every future advance it shall be lawful for the Exchequer Loan Commissioners, with the approbation of the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury or of any three or more of them, and also for any private persons, if they shall see fit, to extend the repayment of any principal sum so to be borrowed to a period not exceeding twenty years as aforesaid: provided always, that not less than one twentieth part of such principal sum and the interest due in each year upon the whole sum remaining due shall be paid off in every year.

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76.

Period for repayment of loans already made may be extended to 20 years instead of 10 years; and in future advances the repayment may be extended to 20 years.

2. And be it further declared and enacted, that any loans which have or shall in future be made by the said Exchequer Loan Commissioners or by any private persons under the said recited act, and the period of repayment of which shall be extended under the provisions of this act, such extension shall be without prejudice to any security or securities taken or which may in future be taken for such sums or advances respectively, and such loans shall by virtue of such extension be repayable at the extended periods in such and the like manner as if such extended periods of repayment had been inserted in such security or securities respectively instead of the periods provided by the said recited act and set forth in such security or securities respectively.

Extension of repayment of loans not to prejudice the securities.

persons born in Scotland and Ireland, repealed.

Justices at sessions may order removal, by sea or land, of chargeable poor born in Scotland or Ireland, &c. at expense of complaining parish.

Expense to be repaid by county, &c. in which complaining parish is situate.

Justices at sessions to direct how parties shall be removed.

Justices at quarter sessions to make rules, &c. for carrying this act into execution.

Churchwardens, &c. to be repaid vagrants in Scotland and Ireland, and the Isles of Man and Scilly; and also so much of an act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor," as relates to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland who have become chargeable to parishes in England; and also so much of an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Punishment of Idle and Disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that part of Great Britain called England," as relates to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and being chargeable to parishes in England, shall be and the same are hereby repealed.

2. And be it further enacted, that from and after the said first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, and they are hereby authorized and required, upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, that any person born in Scotland or Ireland, or in the Isle of Man or Scilly, hath become chargeable to such parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, by himself or herself, or his or her family, to cause such person to be brought before them, and to examine such person and any other witness or witnesses on oath touching the place of the birth or last legal settlement of every such person, and to inquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, hath or have gained any settlement in that part of the United Kingdom called England; and if it shall be found by such justices that the person so brought before them was born in either Scotland or Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly, and hath not gained any settlement in England, and that he or she hath actually become chargeable to the complaining parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, by himself or herself, or his or her family, then such justices shall, and they are hereby empowered, by an order of removal under their hands and seals, in the form in the Schedule hereunto annexed, to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his or her children so chargeable, as shall not have gained a settlement in England, to be removed, by sea or land, in such manner as may have been directed by the justices at quarter sessions assembled in and for the county, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty in which the said parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor may be situate, by and at the charge and expense of the complaining parish, to Scotland or Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly respectively, according as such poor person, or his or her family, shall belong to Scotland, Ireland, or the Isle of Man or Scilly, the charge and expense whereof shall be repaid, in manner hereinafter mentioned, to such complaining parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor, out of the county rate raised and levied in the county, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty in which such parish shall be situate.

3. And be it further enacted, that the justices of the peace of every county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty are hereby authorized and required, at the general or quarter sessions of the peace holden in and for such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty next after the passing of this act, or some adjournment thereof, and from time to time thereafter, at their general or quarter sessions, or adjournment thereof, to direct in what manner, and whether by sea or land, or part of the way by land and part by sea, such poor person, his wife and child or children, removable under the provisions of this act by the churchwardens and overseers of any parish, township, or place maintaining its own poor within such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, shall be removed.

4. And be it further enacted, that the justices of the peace of every county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty shall and may and they are hereby required, at the general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in and for such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty next after the passing of this act, or some adjournment thereof, and from time to time thereafter, at their general or quarter sessions, or adjournment thereof, to make such orders, rules, regulations, and directions for the more effectually carrying the provisions of this act into execution as they in their discretion shall think proper; which orders, rules, regulations, and directions shall from time to time be observed and submitted to by all justices of the peace, overseers, churchwardens, constables, and other persons concerned in or charged with the removal of such poor person, his wife, child or children as aforesaid, within such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty.

5. And be it further enacted, that in case the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, township, or place maintaining its own poor, on whose complaint such order of removal shall be made as aforesaid, shall bring or send to the clerk of the peace or town clerk of the county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty in which such parish, township, or place maintaining its own poor shall be situate, such order of removal, accompanied with an affidavit sworn before some justice of the peace of such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, (who is hereby authorized to administer the same,) of the amount of the expenses bonâ fide incurred and paid by such churchwardens and overseers on account of the removal of such poor person, his wife, child or children as aforesaid, and also a statement of the several items comprised in such amount, such clerk of the peace or town clerk is hereby required to lay the same before the justices of the peace assembled at the quarter sessions, or adjournment thereof, held in and for such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, next after he shall have received the same; and the said justices so assembled as aforesaid are hereby authorized and required to order the amount thereof to be paid out of the county rate raised and levied in such county, riding, city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty: provided, that on the removal of such poor person, his wife, child or children as aforesaid, the orders, rules, regulations, and directions of the said justices, made as herein-before mentioned, have been duly complied with.

expenses out of county rate.

6. And be it further enacted, that all such charges and expenses as aforesaid, which shall be properly and reasonably made for the purposes aforesaid out of any such parish rates within the city of London, shall by such parish or extra-parochial place maintaining its own poor, or parish next adjoining to such extra-parochial place, be charged against the said city of London, and being audited and allowed by the justices of the said city of London assembled at any quarter sessions or adjourned sessions of the peace in or for the said city of London, shall thereupon by the chamberlain of the said city of London be repaid to the overseers or guardians of the poor of the said parish or extra-parochial place maintaining its own poor, or parish next adjoining to such extra-parochial place, for the benefit thereof; for which purpose a rate or assessment shall be made by the order and under the authority of such justices of the said city of London, in the several wards of the said city of London, at such time or times as such justices shall think fit, in the same manner and with the same powers and authorities as the rates for the relief of the poor are made in the said parishes and extra-parochial places; and the powers and authorities contained in the several acts of parliament for making and collecting rates for the relief of the poor shall be and the same are hereby extended to this act.

How expenses to be defrayed of removing poor persons within London.

7. And be it further enacted, that in any city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty which does not contribute to the county rate, or in which no county rate shall be made, raised, or levied, the charges and expenses paid for the purposes aforesaid by the parish or parishes within such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty as aforesaid shall be allowed by the justices of the peace for such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty as aforesaid, at any quarter sessions or adjourned sessions of the peace, and paid by the order of such justices to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish or parishes within such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, for which purposes a general rate or assessment shall be made by the order and under the authority of such justices in the parish or parishes, if more than one, within such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, at such time or times as such justices shall think fit, in the same manner and with the same powers and authorities as the rates for the relief of the poor are made in the parish or parishes of such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty; and the powers and authorities contained in the several acts of parliament for making and collecting rates for the relief of the poor shall be and the same are hereby extended to this act for the making, raising, levying, and collecting the said rate.

How expenses to be defrayed when parish is situate in any city, &c. not contributing to county rate.

8. And be it further enacted, that this act shall continue in force until the first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and to the end of the then next session of parliament.

To all to whom these presents shall come, we the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales send greeting.

Preamble.

WHEREAS, in pursuance of the powers given to us in and by an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," We, the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, appointed under the said act, did by an order under our hands and seal, bearing date the _____, order and declare that the parishes and places named in the margin of the said order, which are situate in the count of _____, being the same which are now named in the margin at the foot of this page, should, on the _____ day of _____ be, and thenceforth should remain united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor: And further that on the _____ day of _____ and in the manner therein mentioned, the said parishes and places should respectively elect a guardian or guardians for the said Union.

Recites order.

And whereas by the said act it is provided that the Poor Law Commissioners shall prescribe the duties of guardians, and shall also, as and when they shall see fit, direct the guardians of any Union to appoint such paid officers, with such qualifications as the said Commissioners shall think necessary, for superintending or assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, either within or out of a workhouse, and for the examining and auditing, allowing or disallowing of accounts in such Union, and otherwise carrying the provisions of the said act into execution. And the said Commissioners are thereby empowered to define and specify and direct the execution of the respective duties, and determine the continuance in office or dismissal of such paid officers, and the amount and nature of the security to be given by, and regulate the amount of salaries payable to, such officers respectively, and the time and mode of payment thereof.

Recites the clauses in the Act authorizing the Board of Poor Law Commissioners to direct the appointment of paid officers.

Now know ye that, in pursuance of the said provisions of the said act, We, the said Poor Law Commissioners, do hereby order, direct, and declare, that—

MEETINGS OF THE BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

5. The first meeting of the guardians shall be held at on the 183, and shall commence at ten o'clock in the forenoon: at which meeting every guardian is hereby required to attend: but if three guardians be present at such first meeting, the non-attendance of the remainder shall not invalidate the proceedings of such meeting.

6. The guardians shall meet once at the least in every week, at for the execution of their duties, and shall, at their first meeting, determine upon some fixed day of the week, and some fixed hour between eight o'clock in the forenoon and two o'clock in the afternoon, for holding such weekly meetings, and also on some convenient place for holding the same.

7. Notice of the first of the said weekly meetings, and of the place, day, and hour fixed for holding the same, shall be given in manner hereinafter directed; but it shall not be necessary to give notice of any other than the first of such weekly meetings.

8. If three guardians be not present at any weekly or other meeting, the guardian or guardians who shall be present shall adjourn the same to the next day of weekly meeting, or to such other day previous to the next weekly meeting as he or they shall think fit; and thereupon the clerk shall make an entry in the minute-book of the adjournment, and of the cause thereof; and in case no guardian shall attend, the clerk shall make an entry of such failure of attendance; provided that, in either case, one hour and no more shall be allowed to elapse from the time fixed for the commencement of the meeting before any such entry be made as is above directed.

9. The majority of the guardians present at any weekly meeting may, if necessary, adjourn the same to the day of the next weekly meeting, or to such other day previous to the next weekly meeting, as they may think fit.

10. Any two guardians, by a notice in writing, according to the form A, hereto annexed, may direct the clerk to the board of guardians to summon an extraordinary meeting of the board at any time by such notice as hereinafter is mentioned.

11. Notice of the first weekly meeting of the guardians, and notice of adjournment of a weekly or other meeting, and notice of an extraordinary meeting, shall be given in writing according to the forms B. C. and D. hereto annexed, and signed by the clerk to the board of guardians; and two days at least before the day upon which the meeting to which such notice relates is to take place, the clerk to the board of guardians shall give or cause to be given to each guardian resident within the Union, or cause to be left at his place of abode, a copy of such notice.

12. If any case of emergency shall arise, requiring that a meeting of the guardians shall immediately take place, they or any three of them may meet, and act as if a regular notice had been given; and may take such case into consideration, and give order therein, provided always that such order shall only be valid and have effect until the next weekly meeting of the board of guardians.

1. Orders, &c. for Guidance of Boards of Guardians.

12. Meetings in case of emergency.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD.

Proceedings of Board.

13. At each weekly meeting of the board of guardians the business shall be conducted in the following order:—

13. Order of proceeding: Minutes of former meetings to be read.

Firstly. They shall read over the minutes of the preceding weekly meeting, and of any extraordinary meeting which shall have been held during the preceding week, and cause an entry of the same having been so read to be made in the minutes.

Secondly. They shall dispose of such business as may have arisen out of the minutes so read, and give the necessary directions thereon.

Business arising out of the same to be first transacted. To consider applications as to relief.

Thirdly. They shall consider and decide upon, and give the necessary directions respecting all applications which shall have been made since the last meeting, and also respecting the amount and nature of relief to be given or continued to the paupers upon the books of the parishes or places in the said Union, or within any of the workhouses thereof, until the next weekly meeting, or during such other time as such relief may be deemed to be necessary.

Fourthly. They shall hear and consider applications of any paupers which may be made at the existing meeting; but no such application shall be heard, unless such paupers shall have previously applied to the relieving officer for the parish from which such paupers claim relief.

To consider applications of paupers.

Fifthly. They shall determine the kind of work to be performed by the paupers either in or out of the workhouse.

Employment of paupers to be fixed. To inspect books and accounts.

Sixthly. They shall examine the books and accounts of the several relieving officers, receive reports on the state of the workhouse or workhouses of the Union, and give all needful directions thereon.

Seventhly. They shall give the necessary directions to the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes in the Union, for providing such sums as may be requisite for the relief of the poor of such parishes, and for defraying such proportion of the general expenses of the Union as shall be lawfully chargeable on such parishes respectively.

Directions to churchwardens, &c. respecting relief to be given.

Eighthly. The guardians present, or the presiding chairman in their behalf, shall sign the minutes of the proceedings.

To sign the minutes.

APPOINTMENT OF CLERK, TREASURER, AND RELIEVING OFFICERS.

14. Appointment of Clerk, &c.

14. At the first meeting of the guardians, or within one month after the same, the guardians shall appoint a fit and proper person to be clerk to the board of guardians, and a fit and proper person to be treasurer to the said Union, and shall take such security for the proper discharge of the said office of treasurer as shall seem to them necessary and fitting; and shall also appoint such and so many competent person or persons as the said board of guardians shall think fit, to be a relieving officer or relieving officers of the said Union, and shall likewise determine the parishes or places for which each such relieving officer shall act: and in case and so often as any person so appointed shall die, or resign, or be removed, the said board of guardians shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such death, resignation, or removal, proceed in like manner to a new appointment; and the salaries of such clerk, treasurer, or relieving officers, shall be such as the said Poor Law Commissioners shall from time to time direct.

15. If any such clerk or relieving officer shall be at any time prevented by sickness or accident from the performance of his duties, the board of guardians may appoint a competent person to act as his temporary substitute.

15. In case of sickness.

16. If the board of guardians shall, in the event of any vacancy in the office of relieving officer or clerk, delay to make a new appointment, or to appoint a substitute in case of sickness or accident as aforesaid, the duties hereby required to be performed by such relieving officer shall, in the cases aforesaid, and also in the meantime and until the first relieving officer shall be appointed as herein directed, be performed by the overseers of the poor of the several parishes and places in the Union respectively; and the duties of clerk to the board of guardians shall in the like cases be performed by the vice-chairman, or in his absence by some guardian to be appointed by the chairman.

16. When no fresh appointment made; by whom duties to be performed.

1. *Orders, &c.
for Guidance of Boards of Guardians.*

17. Relieving officer to reside in one of the parishes for which he acts.

18. Duties of Clerk.

To attend meetings, &c.
To keep accounts, &c.

To conduct correspondence, &c.

To give notices.

To observe all orders, &c.

19. Duties of Relieving Officers.

To attend meetings.

To receive applications for relief, &c.

To give temporary relief.

To notify sickness of paupers.

To keep account of monies disbursed by him for poor.

To report cases of relief given by churchwardens.

To enter names of paupers, &c. in a book.

To make out quarterly list.

To observe orders, &c.

17. No person shall be chosen as such relieving officer unless he will undertake to reside in one of the parishes for which he may be appointed to act, and to devote his whole time to the employment, not following any other trade or profession whatsoever, nor unless he can read and write and keep accounts.

DUTIES OF THE CLERK.

18. The following shall be the duties of the clerk:—

Firstly. To attend all meetings of the guardians, and to enter punctually into a book at every meeting the minutes of all the proceedings thereat; which minutes shall be submitted to the presiding chairman of the same for his signature.

Secondly. To keep all such accounts, books of account, minute-books, and other memoranda, as the board of guardians may think necessary, and as the Poor Law Commissioners may require.

Thirdly. To conduct the correspondence of the board of guardians according to their directions; and to make all necessary copies thereof, and preserve the same, and all letters and documents belonging to the Union.

Fourthly. To give such notices of adjourned and other meetings of the guardians as hereinbefore are mentioned.

Fifthly. Generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the board of guardians; and likewise the rules, orders, and regulations already, or to be hereafter, issued by the Poor Law Commissioners.

DUTIES OF THE RELIEVING OFFICERS.

19. The following shall be the duties of each relieving officer:—

Firstly. To attend all weekly meetings of the guardians, and all other meetings when summoned for that purpose.

Secondly. To receive all applications for relief, and to examine into the merits and circumstances of each case, and report the same to the board at their next weekly meeting.

Thirdly. In cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to give such temporary relief as each case shall require, either by placing the pauper in the workhouse or affording relief out of the house, in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money; whether the applicant for relief be settled in any parish or place comprised in the Union or not.

Fourthly. As soon as he shall have had notice of the sickness of, or of any injury received by, any pauper in any of the parishes or places for which he may be appointed to act, he shall notify the fact to the medical officer, and in the meantime furnish such relief as the emergency of the case may call for; and shall also furnish such further relief in or out of the workhouse as the case, upon the certificate of the medical officer, may appear to require.

Fifthly. To keep a separate, full, and true account of all monies received and disbursed by him, for or on account of the relief of the poor of each parish for which he shall be appointed to act, and also of all articles received and given out by him for the relief of the out-door poor, and to balance such account weekly, and present the same for inspection and approval at the meeting of the guardians.

Sixthly. To report to the board of guardians, at their weekly meeting, all cases in which relief shall have been given by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish or place for which he shall be appointed to act.

Seventhly. To keep a book in which he shall enter the name of, and other particulars relating to the paupers relieved out of the workhouse, and the amount of relief afforded to them respectively; and to produce such book for the inspection of the guardians at every weekly meeting of the board.

Eighthly. Once in every quarter of a year, as soon as conveniently may be after the respective days following, namely, Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas-day, he shall make out a list, according to form E, for each of the parishes or places for which he may be appointed to act, of the paupers who have received relief during the previous quarter, and of the relief afforded them in or out of the workhouse, and shall affix copies of such lists respectively, upon the principal doors of the parish churches of the parishes or places for which such lists are made; which copies shall remain so affixed for three successive Sundays.

Ninthly. Generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the board of guardians, and likewise the rules, orders, and regulations already or to be hereafter issued by the Poor Law Commissioners.

DUTIES OF CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF THE POOR.

Firstly. The churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every parish or place in the union shall make, assess, and collect all rates which shall be necessary for the relief of the poor, and for defraying all other charges and expenses which by law now are, or hereafter may be, chargeable on the same; and shall duly and properly satisfy all such charges and expenses; and shall at the end of each quarter, submit to the auditor of the union a distinct account and balance-sheet, exhibiting the amount so collected and the amount so disbursed.

Secondly. They shall, from time to time, pay over from the rates so collected all such sums as by the authority of the board of guardians expressed to them in writing, according to the form K. hereunto annexed, signed by the presiding chairman of any meeting and two other guardians present at the same, and countersigned by the clerk, shall be directed to be provided from the poor-rates of their respective parishes for the necessary relief of the poor thereof, and for defraying such proportion of the general expenses of the union as shall be lawfully chargeable on such parishes respectively; and shall pay over such sums to such person or persons, at such times and places, as by the same authority shall be directed, and shall take such person's receipt for the same; and shall produce such authority and such receipt as their vouchers for those payments before the auditor of the union in passing their quarterly accounts.

Thirdly. They shall provide, at the expense of the parish or place, a Rate Book, according to the Form G. hereunto annexed; and shall duly and punctually make the entries therein of the several matters mentioned in the headings of the several columns of the said form: and every rate for the relief of the poor in such parish or place, and the allowance of such rate by the justices, shall be recorded in the said rate book.

Fourthly. If any churchwarden or overseer of the poor of any parish or place in this union shall, in any case of sudden and urgent necessity, deem it right that temporary relief to any pauper in articles of necessity should be given out of the workhouse, such churchwarden or overseer shall, if possible, cause the same to be given by the relieving officer for such parish or place; but if such churchwarden or overseer shall give such relief himself, he shall forthwith report the same in writing to such relieving officer.

Fifthly. If any churchwarden or overseer of the poor of any parish or place in this union shall be ordered, under the 54th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, to give temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, to any poor person not settled nor usually residing in the parish, and shall give such temporary relief accordingly, he shall forthwith report the same in writing to the relieving officer for such parish or place.

Sixthly. If any churchwarden or overseer of the poor of any parish or place in this union shall receive an order directing relief to be given to any person (duly certified, under the hand and seal of one of the signing justices, to be of his own knowledge wholly unable to work,) without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse, he shall forthwith transmit the same to the relieving officer for his parish, to be laid before the board of guardians at their next meeting, that the board of guardians may be enabled without delay to give to the relieving officer the necessary directions as to the amount and nature of the relief to be given.

Seventhly. The churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the several parishes or places in this union are hereby enjoined, in all things where their aid may be necessary or required by the said guardians, or by any relieving officer acting under the directions of the said guardians, to give their aid in carrying the orders of the said guardians into effect, and generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the board of guardians, and likewise the rules, orders, and regulations already, or to be hereafter issued by the Poor Law Commissioners.

RELIEF.

21. Immediately from and after the first meeting of the board of guardians above directed, the guardians of the union, and the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes and places comprised therein, and the relieving officers for the said union, immediately from and after the time of their appointment, shall, to such extent as in the convenient and proper discharge of their several duties they may

21. Relief.

Relief to be given according to following rules.

1. Orders, &c. for Guidance of Boards of Guardians.

No money to be given to able-bodied, &c.

If employed by parish, one-half of relief to be in kind.

One-half of relief to widows, &c. to be in kind.

No relief to be given on account of rent.

No relief to be given to non-resident paupers, except, &c.

be enabled, observe, and conform to, and carry into effect the following Rules and Regulations, relating to the relief of the poor in the said union; and from and after the day of 183 , the said Rules and Regulations shall become peremptory and binding upon the parties above mentioned, and shall not be departed from in any case, nor shall any relief be thereafter given from the poor rates of any parish or place in the union contrary thereto:—

Firstly. No relief shall be given in money (except in cases of sickness or accident,) to any able-bodied male pauper who is in employment, (the same not being parish work,) and in the receipt of earnings; nor to any part of his family who shall be dependent on him, or for whose relief and maintenance he shall be liable.

Secondly. If any able-bodied male pauper shall apply to be set to work by the parish, one-half at least of the relief which may be afforded to him or to his family shall be in kind.

Thirdly. One-half at least of the relief which may be afforded to widows or single women, not being aged or infirm, shall be in kind.

Fourthly. No relief shall be given to any able-bodied male pauper by payment or payments of, for, or on account of the rent for his house or lodging, or for the house or lodging of any part of his family who shall be dependent upon him, and for whose relief and maintenance he shall be liable, or by allowance towards such rent.

Fifthly. Except in case of accident, sickness, or other urgent necessity, no relief shall be afforded from the poor rates of any parish or place comprised in the said union, to any pauper between the ages of sixteen and sixty, belonging to any such parish or place comprised in the said union, who shall not be resident therein: provided always, that this regulation shall not extend to any person not being an able-bodied male pauper between the ages of sixteen and sixty, who shall, on the day herein appointed for the first meeting of the guardians, be in the receipt of relief from any parish or place comprised in the said union, although not resident in such parish or place, and although such person shall continue a non-resident; but in every such case due inquiry shall be made as to the propriety of such relief being continued.

22. Medical Relief.

To contract for medical officer.

23. Medical officer to give certificates when required.

24. To make weekly return.

25. Relief by way of Loan.

26. Purchase of Provisions, &c.

MEDICAL RELIEF.

22. The guardians shall contract with some competent person or persons duly licensed to practise as a medical man, to be the medical officer or officers of the said union, and to attend duly and punctually upon all sick paupers belonging to and resident within the union, either in the workhouse or otherwise, and to supply such sick paupers with necessary medicines; and such contract shall contain a clause, by which the said medical officer shall engage to attend, at a fair and reasonable charge per head, to be named in such contract, on all persons not belonging to any parish or place comprised in the said union, whom by law any such parish or place may be bound to relieve, whether under suspended orders of removal or otherwise.

23. The medical officer shall, in every case, when required by the guardians, or the relieving officer, or by the pauper on whom he is attending, give a certificate under his hand of the sickness of such pauper, or other cause of the attendance of such medical officer, the extent and nature of such sickness at the time of giving such certificate, and its probable duration, and such other particulars as may show how far the applicant is prevented from attending to his usual calling.

24. The medical officer shall make a weekly return to the board of guardians, according to the Form F. hereunto annexed, and shall also attend the board of guardians when summoned by them.

RELIEF BY WAY OF LOAN.

25. Any relief, or the cost price thereof, which the board of guardians shall, after due consideration of the circumstances of the case, think fit to give by way of loan, to or on account of any able-bodied male pauper, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty; or to or on account of his wife, or any part of his family under the age of sixteen, shall be considered as a loan to such pauper, and shall be recoverable as such under the provisions of the Poor Law Amendment Act.

PURCHASE OF PROVISIONS AND OTHER ARTICLES.

26. The board of guardians shall order and direct the purchasing of the supplies of bread, flour, and meat, and other articles required for use in the workhouse, or for the relief of the paupers out of the workhouse, in such manner as may appear to such guardians best calculated to prevent imposition and to promote economical management; and that, with such view, such purchases shall, so far as circumstances will allow, be made upon tenders after public advertisement in one country newspaper at least.

1. Orders, &c. for Guidance of Boards of Guardians.

ACCOUNTS.

27. Accounts.

27. The guardians shall, at their first weekly meeting, or within one month of the same, appoint a competent person to be auditor of the accounts, and immediately report such appointment to the poor law commissioners; and such auditor shall, four times in every year, that is to say, within thirty days of each of the following days, namely, Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas-day, examine and audit, allow or disallow, the accounts of the said union and of the several parishes comprised therein, according to the laws in force for the time being for the administration of the relief of the poor; and the said auditor, having audited the quarterly account, shall with his own hand write a certificate of such audit at the foot of such account, according to the Form H. hereunto annexed; and such accounts so audited, allowed, and certified, shall be open at all reasonable times to the inspection of the rate payers of the parish or place to which such accounts relate.

Guardians to appoint an auditor, who shall audit the accounts quarterly.

And write certificate of such audit.

28. That such auditor shall receive for the performance of such duty, such sum as the board of guardians, with the consent of the Poor Law Commissioners, shall determine; and the auditor so appointed shall remain in office (unless he shall previously die or resign,) until he be removed therefrom by the said commissioners, or by the said board of guardians, with the consent in writing of the said Commissioners; and in either of such cases another auditor shall be in like manner appointed.

28. As to salary.

2. Orders, &c.
for Government
of Workhouses
and Poorhouses.

2. ORDERS AND REGULATIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF WORKHOUSES AND POORHOUSES.

Admission of Paupers.

ADMISSION OF PAUPERS.

1. Paupers may be received into the workhouse in any one of the following modes, and in no other, viz.—

By an order of the board of guardians signified in writing.

By a provisional order in writing, signed by a relieving officer.

By the master of the workhouse, without any such order, in case of any sudden or urgent necessity.

2. No pauper shall be admitted under any written order as above mentioned, if the same bear date more than six days before the pauper presents it, and claims to be admitted.

3. If a pauper be admitted by the provisional order of a relieving officer, or by the master of a workhouse, in a case of sudden and urgent necessity, the admission of such pauper shall be brought before the board of guardians at their next weekly meeting, who shall decide on the propriety of the pauper's continuing in the workhouse or otherwise, and order accordingly.

4. As soon as a pauper is admitted, he or she shall be placed in some probationary room, and shall there remain until examined by the medical officer of the workhouse.

5. If the medical officer upon such examination pronounces the pauper to be labouring under any disease of body or mind, the pauper shall be placed either in the sick ward or the ward for lunatics and idiots not dangerous, as the medical officer shall direct.

6. If the medical officer pronounces the pauper to be free from disease, the pauper shall be placed in the workhouse assigned to the class to which he or she may belong, and shall thereafter be treated according to the regulations hereinafter contained.

7. Before removal from the probationary ward, the pauper shall be thoroughly cleansed, and if adult, shall be clothed in the workhouse dress; and the clothes which he or she wore upon admission shall be purified, and deposited in a place to be appropriated for that purpose, to be restored to the pauper on leaving the workhouse.

8. The clothing of the paupers shall be made of such materials as the board of guardians shall determine, and shall so far as possible be made by the paupers in the workhouse.

Classification of Paupers.

CLASSIFICATION OF PAUPERS.

9. The in-door paupers shall be classed as follows, and to each class shall be assigned by the board of guardians that workhouse or poor house which may be best fitted for the reception of such class, and in which they shall respectively remain unless as hereinafter provided.

1. Aged or infirm men.

2. Able-bodied men, and youths above thirteen.

3. Youths and boys above seven years old and under thirteen.

4. Aged or infirm women.

5. Able-bodied women, and girls above sixteen.

6. Girls above seven years of age and under sixteen.

7. Children under seven years of age.

Provided that, if in special cases the board of guardians deem it advisable, that they shall be at liberty to make exceptions to the above classification of the inmates of any of the workhouses, in favour of individuals of the first and fourth classes.

Provided also, that it shall be in the discretion of the guardians to place any boy, between the ages of thirteen and sixteen, in either of the classes 2 or 3.

10. Any paupers may be taken out of their respective classes, and employed as nurses or as assistants to the nurses in any of the sick wards, or in the care of infants, or as superintendents or assistants in the household work for any of the classes, and may be so employed either constantly or occasionally. Provided always, that no pauper of the fifth or sixth class be allowed personal communication with any pauper of the second or third class, except as nurse or as assistant to a nurse.

11. The children of the seventh class shall be placed either in a ward by themselves, or in such of the wards appropriated to the female paupers as the board of guardians shall direct. The mothers of such children to be permitted to have access to them, at such reasonable times as the guardians shall appoint. With the foregoing exceptions, no pauper of one class shall be allowed to enter the wards or yards appropriated to any other class.

12. The paupers of the several establishments comprised in the parish or union, shall be employed in any work which may be needed, and of which they may be capable, for the use of any or all of the establishments within the union, or in any other way the board of guardians may direct.

DISCIPLINE AND DIET.

2. Orders, &c.
for Government
of Workhouses
and Poorhouses.

Discipline & Diet.

13. All the paupers in the workhouse, except the sick, the aged and infirm, and the young children, shall rise, be set to work, and be kept to work twelve hours each day in summer and eleven hours in winter, including meals, for which two hours in the whole shall be allowed and no more.

14. Half an hour after the bell shall have been rung for rising, the names shall be called over in the several wards provided for the second, third, fifth, and sixth classes, when every pauper belonging to the ward must be present, to answer to his or her name, and to be inspected by the master or matron, except by reason of sickness or tender years.

15. No pauper of the second, third, fifth, or sixth classes, shall be allowed to go or to remain in his or her sleeping-ward, either in the time hereby allotted for work, or in the intervals allowed for meals, except by permission of the master.

16. As regards aged and infirm persons and children, the master and matron of the workhouse shall (subject to the directions of the board of guardians) fix such hours of rising and going to bed, and such occupation and employment as may be suitable to their respective ages and conditions.

17. The boys and girls who are inmates of the workhouse shall for three of the working hours at least, every day, be respectively instructed in reading, writing, and in the principles of the Christian religion, and such other instructions shall be imparted to them as are calculated to train them to habits of usefulness, industry, and virtue.

18. The meals for the aged and infirm, the sick, and children, shall be provided at such times and in such manner as the board of guardians may direct.

19. The diet of the able bodied paupers shall be so regulated as in no case to exceed in quantity and quality of food, the ordinary diet of any class of able-bodied labourers living within the same district.

20. No pauper shall be allowed to have or use any wine, beer, or other spirituous or fermented liquors, unless by the direction in writing of the medical officer, who may also order for any individual pauper such change of diet as he shall deem necessary; and the master shall report such allowance or changes of diet so made to the next meeting of guardians, who may sanction, alter, or disallow the same at their discretion.

21. No pauper shall be allowed to work on his own account whilst an inmate of the workhouse; the union which supports him being entitled to the full produce of his labour.

22. Any pauper may quit the workhouse giving the master three hours' previous notice of his wish to do so; but no able-bodied pauper, having a family, shall so quit the house without taking the whole of such family with him or her, unless the board of guardians shall otherwise direct; nor shall any pauper, after so quitting the house, be again received into the house, unless in one of the modes prescribed in Rule 1. for the admission of paupers.

23. No person shall be allowed to visit any pauper in the workhouse, except by permission of the master, and subject to such conditions and restrictions as the board of guardians may direct; provided that the interview shall always take place in the presence of the master or matron, and in a room separate from the other inmates of the workhouse unless in case of sickness: Provided also, that any licensed minister of the religious persuasion of any inmate of such workhouse, at all times in the day, on the request of such inmate, may visit such workhouse for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such inmate, and also for the purpose of instructing his child or children in the principles of their religion—such religious assistance, and such instruction, being strictly confined to inmates who are of the religious persuasion of such licensed minister, and to the children of such inmates.

24. No work, except the household work and cooking, shall be performed by the paupers on Sunday.

25. All the paupers shall attend Divine Service, except the sick and the young children, and such as are too infirm to do so, and except also those paupers who

2. *Orders, &c.
for Government
of Workhouses,

may object so to attend, on account of their professing religious principles differing from those of the church of England.

26. Any pauper who shall neglect to observe such of the foregoing rules as are applicable to him or her ;

Or who shall make any noise when silence is ordered ;

Or use obscene or profane language ;

Or by word or deed insult or revile any other pauper in the workhouse ;

Or who shall not duly cleanse his or her person ;

Or neglect or refuse to work ;

Or pretend sickness ;

Or who shall wilfully waste or spoil any provisions, or stock, or tools or materials for work ;

Or wilfully damage any property whatsoever belonging to the parish or union ;

Or disobey any of the legal orders of the master or matron, or other superintendent ; shall be deemed disorderly, and shall be placed in apartments provided for such offenders, or shall otherwise be distinguished in dress, and placed upon such diet as the board of guardians shall prescribe.

27. Any pauper who shall, within seven days, repeat one of the offences specified in Rule 26. ;

Or commit a second of the offences specified in Rule 26.

Or who shall by word or deed insult or revile the master or matron, or any officer of the parish or union ;

Or who shall be guilty of any act of drunkenness or indecency ; shall be deemed to be refractory, and shall be punished by such confinement and alteration of diet as the board of guardians shall direct, by any regulation for that purpose ; but no pauper shall be confined under this rule for any misbehaviour or offence for a longer period than twenty-four hours, or for such further space of time as may be necessary, in order to have such pauper carried before a justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law.

Visiting Committee.

VISITING COMMITTEE.

28. The guardians shall appoint a visiting committee from their own body, whose duty it shall be to examine the workhouse or workhouses of the union once every month at the least, and after a careful inspection, to write such answers as the facts may warrant to the following queries, which are to be printed in a book, entitled the visitor's book, to be kept for that purpose, and submitted regularly to the board of guardians at their weekly meeting.

1. Is the house clean and well ventilated in every part ?—if not, state particulars of every defect or omission.

2. Are the inmates generally healthy, or is there any sickness prevalent among them ?—if so, state particulars, and especially if any dangerous or highly infectious case of illness exists in the house.

3. Are the able-bodied male inmates kept at work as directed by the board of guardians ?—if not, and if any improvement in the mode or description of their employment can be suggested, state the same.

4. Are the able-bodied females properly employed in household work, and in such other manner as is fitting, and as the board of guardians have directed ? if not, and if any improvement can be suggested, state the same.

5. Are the aged and infirm of both sexes kept in employment, as far as they are severally able ? are they all properly attended to, according to their respective conditions ?—if any thing objectionable is noticed, or any useful suggestion occurs, record the same.

6. Are the schools regularly attended to by the master and mistress ? are the youths, boys, and girls properly instructed and set to work, and is due care taken to fit them for becoming useful and respectable members of the community ?

7. Are the children kept clean in their persons, and does their general conduct and behaviour appear to be properly attended to and regulated ?

8. Do the inmates of the workhouse, of all classes, appear clean in their persons, and decent and orderly in their language and demeanour ?—if not, state the exceptions, and the names of the parties failing in this respect.

9. Is the separation of all the various classes within the house strictly enforced at all times ?—state particulars of every instance of deviation from the rules in this respect, if such shall have occurred ; and the particular attention of the visitors is directed to this very important point of discipline,

13. Is the established dietary duly observed? and are the hours of meals regularly adhered to?
11. Is divine service regularly performed in the house? are prayers regularly read?
12. Is regular attendance given by the medical officer?—inspect his last report.
29. For the performance of the duties and ensuring the observance of the rules herein set forth, the board of guardians shall appoint any or all of the following officers and servants, with such assistants as may be deemed necessary, that is to say,

Masters of the workhouses,
Matrons of the workhouses,
Schoolmasters,
Schoolmistresses,
Medical officers,
Porters,
Nurses,

who shall severally perform such duties as are herein set forth, together with all such other duties as the said board of guardians shall lawfully require them to execute.

30. The board of guardians shall allow to the several officers and servants of the workhouse so to be appointed, such amounts of salary or remuneration as the board may think fit, and as the Poor Law Commissioners shall sanction.

31. The board of guardians shall, at their discretion and when they think necessary, suspend from the discharge of their duties any master, matron, schoolmaster, or medical officer of the union, and forthwith report the same, together with the cause of such suspension, to the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, for their decision thereon.

32. The board of guardians shall, from time to time as they shall think necessary, dismiss any of the other officers or servants of the workhouses not enumerated in the preceding Rule 31, and appoint others in their room, without prejudice, nevertheless, to the powers given to the Commissioners by the Poor Law Amendment Act.

MASTER.

Master.

33. The following shall be the duties of the Master of the workhouse:

1. To admit paupers into the workhouse, and to cause them to be examined by the medical officer, and to be cleansed, clothed, and placed in the proper wards, according to the regulations herein established.
2. To enforce industry, order, punctuality, and cleanliness, and the observance of the several rules, herein contained, by the paupers in the workhouse, and by the several officers, servants, and other persons therein employed.
3. To read prayers to the paupers before breakfast, and after supper every day, or cause them to be read—at which all the inmates must attend; but if any of the paupers shall profess religious principles indisposing them to unite in such service, they are to be permitted to sit apart, and not to be compelled to join in the same.
4. To inspect and call over the names of the paupers, according to Rule 14, immediately before morning prayers every day, and see that each individual is clean, and in a proper state.
5. To provide for and enforce the employment of the able-bodied adult paupers during the whole of the hours of labour; to train the youth in such employment as will best fit them for service; to keep the partially disabled paupers occupied to the extent of their ability; and to leave none who are capable of employment idle at any time.
6. To visit the sleeping wards of the first, second, and third classes at eleven o'clock every day, to see that they have been all duly cleaned and properly ventilated.
7. To see that the meals of the paupers are properly dressed and served, and to superintend the distribution thereof.
8. To say or cause to be said grace before and after meals.
9. To see that the dining halls, tables and seats are cleaned after each meal.
10. To visit all the wards of the male paupers at nine o'clock every night, and see that all the male paupers are in bed, and that all fires and lights are extinguished.
11. To receive from the gatekeeper the keys of the workhouse at nine o'clock every night, and to deliver them to him again at seven o'clock every morning.
12. To send for the Medical Officer in case any pauper is taken ill, and to take care that all sick and lunatic paupers be provided with such medicines and attendance, diet, and other necessities, as the medical officer shall in writing direct.

2. *Orders, &c.
for Government
of Workhouses
and Poorhouses,*

13. In case any pauper shall die in the workhouse, the master shall inform the medical officer, in order that he may examine into and certify the cause thereof in writing, for the information of the board of guardians; and the master of the workhouse shall also, so far as may be practicable, forthwith inform the friends of the pauper of his or her decease, in order that they may remove the body for interment; and in case the body is not so removed within a reasonable time, the same shall be interred at the expense of the parish to which the pauper belonged.
14. The master shall take charge of the clothes, and other articles, if any, of such deceased pauper, and shall deliver an inventory thereof to the next meeting of the board of guardians, who shall give the necessary directions respecting the same.
15. The master shall keep the following books, which shall be constantly open to the inspection of any of the guardians of the union, and be submitted to the board at their weekly meetings:—
 - An Admission and Discharge Book, according to the annexed Form A.
 - A Store Account Book, according to the annexed Form B.
 - A Work Book, showing daily the several kinds of work on which the paupers are employed, and stating the numbers occupied on each description of labour;—together with such explanations as shall be necessary for a clear understanding of the state of the labour department in all its details.
 - A Register of births and deaths of paupers which may take place in the workhouse.
16. At each weekly meeting of the board of guardians, to present or send to the board an estimate of such provisions and other articles as will be required for the use of the workhouse, and to receive and execute the directions of the board thereupon.
17. To receive all provisions and other articles purchased or procured for the use of the workhouse, and before placing them in store, to weigh, examine, and compare the same with the bills of parcels severally relating thereto; and after having proved the accuracy of such bills in all respects, to authenticate the same with his signature, and submit them to the board of guardians at their next meeting.
18. To receive and take charge of all provisions, clothing, linen, and other articles belonging to the workhouse or confided to his care by the board of guardians of the said union.
19. Not to purchase or procure any articles for the use of the workhouse, nor to order any alterations or repairs of any part of the premises, or of the furniture, or other articles belonging thereto, nor to pay any monies on account of the workhouse, or of the union, without the order, in writing, of the board of guardians, being first duly entered in the Order Book provided for that purpose.
20. To take care that the wards, rooms, larder, kitchen, and all offices of the workhouse, and all the utensils and furniture thereof, be kept clean and in good order, and that all the rooms and wards in the workhouse be lime-washed twice in each year.
21. To read over to the paupers the regulations herein contained at such times as the board of guardians shall direct.
22. To report to the board of guardians from time to time, the names of such children, or boys and girls, as it may be desirable to put out to service, or as apprentices, and take the necessary steps for effecting the same under the direction of the board of guardians.
23. To report all matters of interest or importance, as the same shall occur, to the guardians, and to keep them informed of the state of the workhouse in every department, as well as of the condition of the union generally, as far as he may be able to learn the same: and to offer suggestions to the guardians for the correction of abuses, and the introduction of improvements in the management of the workhouse; and generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the board of guardians, and likewise the rules, orders, and regulations already or to be hereafter issued by the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales.

MATRON.

Matron.

34. The following shall be the duties of the Matron of the workhouse:—
 1. To see that the in-door work of the establishment is, as far as possible, performed by the female paupers maintained therein.

2. To provide for and enforce the employment of the able-bodied female paupers during the whole of the hours of labour ; and to keep the partially disabled paupers occupied to the extent of their ability.
3. To visit all the wards of the females and children every night, and to ascertain that all the paupers in such wards are in bed, and the fires and lights duly extinguished.
4. To pay particular attention to the moral conduct and orderly behaviour of the female paupers and children ; to see that they are clean and decent in their dress and persons, and to train them up in such employments as will best fit them for service.
5. To superintend and give the necessary directions for making and mending the clothing supplied to the female paupers and pauper children ; and also the linen supplied to the male paupers of the union ; and to take care that all such clothing or linen be marked with the name of the union.
6. To see that every pauper in the workhouse has clean linen and stockings once a week, and that all the beds be supplied with clean sheets once a month.
7. To take charge of the linen and stockings for the use of the paupers, and any other linen in use in the house, and to superintend and give the necessary directions concerning the washing, drying, and getting up the same, and not to permit any to be dried in the sleeping wards, or of the sick or lunatic wards.
8. To take care, with the assistance of the nurses, of the sick paupers and young children in the workhouse ; to see that they are clean in their persons, and to provide such diet for the sick paupers and the young children as the medical officer shall direct, and to furnish them with such changes of clothes and linen as may be necessary.
9. To assist the master in the general management and superintendence of the workhouse, and especially in
 - Enforcing the observance of good order, cleanliness, punctuality, industry, and decency of demeanour among the paupers.
 - The cleansing and clothing of female paupers on their admission.
 - The cleansing and ventilating the sleeping wards and the dining halls, and all parts of the premises.
 - The placing in store and taking charge of the provisions, clothing, and linen belonging to the union or parish.
10. And generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the board of guardians, and the rules, orders, and regulations issued by the Poor Law Commissioners.

SCHOOLMASTER AND SCHOOLMISTRESS.

35. The Schoolmaster and Schoolmistress of the workhouse shall instruct the boys and girls in the house, as directed in rule 18.

MEDICAL OFFICER.

36. The following shall be the duties of the Medical Officer.
 1. To attend at the workhouse at such stated times as may be directed by the board of guardians, and also when sent for by the master or matron of the workhouse, in cases of sudden illness, accident, or other emergency ; and at all such other times as the state of the sick or lunatic patients within the workhouse may render necessary.
 2. To examine into the state of the patients in the sick and lunatic wards ; and also into the state of those sick paupers who have not yet been removed there, and also to examine into the state of the paupers on their admission into the workhouse.
 3. To ascertain and report to the board of guardians the cause and circumstances of every death which may take place in the workhouse.
 4. To give all necessary directions as to the diet, classification, and treatment of the sick and lunatic paupers, and to provide the requisite medicines, and to make up in writing, in the form and according to the instructions in schedule C., a register of the sickness and mortality which may have obtained amongst the paupers in the workhouse, together with such remarks on their general health and state as he may deem fitting, to be laid before the guardians at each weekly meeting of the board. In which book also, the medical officer shall insert the date of every attendance at the workhouse.

2. Orders, &c. for Government of Workhouses and Poorhouses.

3. CIRCULAR STATING DUTIES OF PAROCHIAL OFFICERS.

POOR LAW COMMISSION OFFICE SOMERSET HOUSE,
1st March, 1836.

To the Churchwardens, Overseers, and other Officers required to account for the Expenditure of the Poor Rates. (a)

1. By the order for keeping, examining, and auditing accounts, issued by the Commissioners under the authority of the Poor Law Amendment Act, it is required that the accounts of each separate parish, and also the accounts of every union, shall be made up quarterly and duly audited.

2. Under the late mode of administration, much money was unequally collected, or was altogether omitted to be collected, and much was improperly expended. Either from ignorance or neglect, many illegal practices have crept into the administration of relief, which, from their notoriety and general prevalence, have been supposed to be legal, and have frequently been continued in perfect confidence of their correctness. The Commissioners are aware that many of the charges thus illegally defrayed out of the poor-rates were incurred for useful public purposes, but all such illegal charges they are bound to disallow; and they have accordingly issued directions to the auditors to disallow them in the quarterly audit of the accounts. The Commissioners have directed the following instructions to be issued to prevent you from incurring such charges unwittingly, and to save you from the consequences of their disallowance. (a) Some of these instructions may not be strictly applicable to individual parishes governed under the provisions of local acts. The nature of such modifications as may be necessary in each case cannot be here specified, but will readily suggest themselves to persons acquainted with the provisions of the acts in question. (a)

3. Under the law as it stood previously to the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act, the churchwardens and overseers were alone answerable for the whole of the expenditure for the relief of paupers; and the accounts of masters of work-houses, and other subordinate officers, were necessarily included in the accounts

(a) These were issued from the public office in explanation of the valuable improvements by the new system, and for the more explicit and familiar instruction and assistance of parochial officers, see ante, 6, 7. Moreover, greatly to the honour of the Commissioners and their able secretary Mr. Chadwick, the utmost facility is constantly given to all reasonable enquiries by parochial officers and others; and no public office is distinguished more for ability and liberality in all communications connected with the department.

3. Duties of Parochial Officers.

of the churchwardens and overseers. Under the Poor Law Amendment Act, the obligation to account is extended to every officer or other person to whom money, or any goods, stock, or other property is intrusted; and the account must be regularly rendered for goods or stock as well as for money.

4. Formerly it was generally understood that the order of a magistrate or other superior authority, to any parish officer, was to be implicitly obeyed without any examination of its validity, and that the order of itself exonerated the officer to whom it was directed from all legal responsibility: but, by the 96th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, it is enacted that thenceforth, from the passing of the statute, "no overseer shall be liable to any prosecution or penalty for not carrying into execution any illegal order of such justices or guardians; any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding." As the accounts of every officer may be disallowed, so every officer, whilst he is bound to obey all orders which are legal, is equally bound to disobey all orders which are illegal, and will be personally answerable in either case.

5. On entering upon your office, you must obtain from your predecessors the balances of rates and other monies in their hands, and also ascertain whether there are any charges relating to the past year unliquidated. You must bear in mind that the law protects the present rate-payers from being charged with expenses incurred by former officers; and that, as a general rule, no items which relate to a past year can properly be brought into the account for the current year. The exceptions to this rule are, where the preceding officers have, from unavoidable circumstances and not from neglect, been unable to collect the rates, in which case they may be reimbursed for any advances made by them to the extent of the arrears of rates to be collected. Another admissible exception is, where the preceding overseers may have advanced sums of money during a time when no rate could have been enforced; as where an appeal has been depending, by which the whole of the rate was affected, in which case the succeeding overseers may reimburse their predecessors in office. So, again, where a legal charge has accrued so late as to render it impossible to make and collect a rate of which the former overseers might have been reimbursed, in which case it is lawful for the succeeding overseers to pay the charge.

6. It should be observed that, by the 47th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, "all balances due from any guardian, treasurer, overseer, or assistant overseer, or other person having the controul and distribution of the poor-rate, or accountable for such balances, may be recovered in the same manner as any penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act; provided, nevertheless, that no such proceeding shall discharge the liability of the surety of any such treasurer, overseer, or other person as aforesaid."

7. All penalties and forfeitures under this act may be levied by distress and sale of goods and chattels, by warrant under the hand of two justices; and in case such forfeitures be not forthwith paid, the justices may order the offender to be kept in custody until return can conveniently be made to the distress warrant, unless the offender shall give sufficient security for his appearance on the return-day of the warrant; but if, upon the return of the warrant, there appears that no sufficient distress can be had, the offender may be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, to remain without bail or mainprize, unless such penalties and all reasonable charges be sooner paid.

8. By the act 43d of Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, the churchwardens and overseers are directed to raise, weekly or otherwise, competent sums of money for the relief of the poor. By the 4th section, the same officers are armed with powers to enforce the payment of such money and "of all arrearages." But the parish officers having been allowed a discretion, in point of time, for the collection of rates, abusive practices have crept in, under which the collections have been made at much longer intervals than those intended by the legislature. By neglecting to make frequent collections, large amounts have been required at each contribution from the rate-payer, and many persons who would have had no difficulty in paying smaller sums at more frequent intervals, have become defaulters. Through the length of these intervals, payment has also been frequently avoided by the removal of the rate-payers out of the parish. It has also been a mal-practice of churchwardens and overseers to favour some rate-payers by allowing them to continue in arrear for former rates, while more recent rates were in course of collection. By these neglects and mal-practices, the persons who pay the rates regularly have been unduly burthened, and much money has often been lost to the parish. It has, moreover, been a practice to harass particular individuals with collections, before the regular collection is made from the rate-payers generally.

9. To abate the evils which have thus grown up, and to limit the discretionary power under which they have been generated, it is now provided that the accounts shall be audited quarterly, and it will hereafter be requisite that you should regularly and impartially collect the rates, and pay all expenses incurred, and as far as practicable confine the quarterly accounts to the charges of the quarter.

10. It is proper to caution you that the quarterly audit now directed does not dispense with the usual yearly audit, and that any illegal charges which may escape the notice of, or be allowed by the auditors, at the quarterly audit, may nevertheless be disallowed or reduced by the justices at the yearly audit. The jurisdiction of the court of quarter sessions, on appeals from the allowances or disallowances of the yearly accounts of overseers by the justices remains in force, and the penalties to which overseers neglecting to account, or to deliver over balances or parish property, were made liable by former acts, may still be imposed by justices of the peace.

11. By the statute 43d of Elizabeth, the overseers or collectors of rates are bound to collect equally the rates from all persons. It is only upon the authority of justices that any individual occupier can be excused from the payment of rates. If, therefore, you find any person occupying a tenement, who from poverty is incapable of paying his rates, the only course which you can legally take is to submit the case to the magistrates, with evidence of the fact of inability—such as his being only in partial employment—his having suffered from calamities—and his living in a state of privation of the ordinary comforts or conveniences. Proof must be given of a state approaching to pauperism on the part of any occupier, to exempt him from the payment of the rates. Having upon such evidence, and not upon the mere assertion of the party, received the magistrates' order to excuse the party from the payment of the rate assessed upon him, you must preserve such order; for unless you are enabled to produce it as a voucher, you may be compelled to pay the amount which you would otherwise have been called upon to collect.

12. The only other deductions allowed to be made in the collection of the rates are, where property, not subject to the rate, has been assessed by mistake, as where property is exempted, or where it is unoccupied; also where persons have removed within the interval reasonably allowed for the collection of the rate, and have thus escaped payment in the regular course; but in every such case you are bound to collect the arrear thus accruing, and if necessary to resort to legal means for recovering the amount. You must be prepared with evidence to establish the grounds for these deductions from the full amount of the rate allowed; and, until the rate already allowed has been thus fully collected, no new rate must be applied for; and if applied for in any case, the justices are bound to withhold their sanction, and to require that the whole of the old rate should be first collected and accounted for.

13. Besides the poor-rates, you are bound to collect and bring to account the monies derivable to the parish from other sources, namely—

All rents, dividends, or other funds arising from bequests vested in the parish officers for the relief of the poor.

All payments by the natural relations of paupers, or by the parents of bastard children.

All repayments of relief given by way of loan, under the 59th Geo. III. c. 12, or under the Poor Law Amendment Act, &c.

All repayments, by other parishes, of the cost of relief to paupers under order of removal, or otherwise.

All earnings by paupers maintained by the parish in or out of the house.

All penalties, fines, and forfeitures, wholly, or in part, for the use of the poor;

As well as all other monies applicable to the same use.

14. Your attention will next be required to your duties in the expenditure of the rates and other monies so collected; and herein you must bear in mind, that usage is of no legal authority in the construction of the statute of Elizabeth, by which the poor-rates are established. The law has not given to the parish officers or even to the vestry any power of charging or of taxing their fellow-parishioners, even for useful purposes, at their own mere discretion; and no charge upon the poor-rates is legal, unless it is in plain words sanctioned or directed by some statute.

15. The following is a list of the statutes, under the authority of which the poor-rates are chiefly levied and expended:—

3. Duties of Parochial Officers.Authority.Charges on Rates.

43 Eliz. c. 2.	{ Setting to work the able. Relieving the impotent.
4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, (P. L. Amendment Act)	{ Maintenance of the poor in workhouses. Out-door relief to the aged and infirm. Out-door relief to the able-bodied. Out-door relief in cases of emergency. Casual relief to the poor. Medical relief. Relief to bastards.

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 84, (P. L. Amendment Act)	{ Costs of relief to persons under orders of removal.
9 Geo. I. c. 7; 22 Geo. III. c. 83; 59 Geo. III. c. 12; 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 21—25, (P. L. Amendment Act.)	{ Building, altering, enlarging, purchasing, hiring, and fitting up of workhouses.
4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 14, (P. L. Amendment Act.)	{ Expenses of witnesses before Poor Law Commissioners where allowed by them.
4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 82	Costs of appeals.
59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7	Salary to assistant overseer.
12 Geo. II. c. 29, &c.	County rate.
5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 92, (Cor- poration Reform Act)	{ Borough rate in the nature of a county rate.
7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 15	{ Compensation by the hundred in places not contributing to the county rate.
7 Geo. IV. c. 64	{ Costs and compensations in the prosecution of felony in such places.
25 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 5; 58 Geo. III. c. 70, s. 7 & 8	{ Costs of prosecuting persons keeping disor- derly houses.
18 Geo. III. c. 19, &c.	{ Sums expended by constables in doing actual business of the parish, in the relief or re- moval of vagrants, &c.
11 Geo. IV. 1 Will. IV. c. 30, s. 10.	Making population returns.
6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 9	Printing a sufficient number of jury lists.

16. This list is not to be deemed complete, as by clauses inserted in various general acts as well as by many local acts, charges are in certain cases made payable out of the poor-rates for objects not connected with the original intention of the poor laws. In no case, however, except in relief of destitution, will it be safe to make any payments out of the poor-rates, unless sanctioned by the express direction of some statute. In doubtful cases therefore the proper inquiry will always be "Under what statute, or by what regulation is the proposed charge warranted?" and, unless the authority can be found in the words of the statute, or in some lawful order or regulation of the Poor Law Commissioners, it must be presumed that the charge would be illegal.

17. By the 50th Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, the justices (and by the Poor Law Amendment Act, auditors) are authorized to strike out of the overseers' accounts "all such charges and payments as they shall deem to be unfounded, and to reduce such as they shall deem to be exorbitant, specifying on the foot of such account every such charge or payment, and its amount, so far as such justices shall disallow or reduce the same, and the cause for which the same was disallowed or reduced."

18. With relation to the unfounded charges, the primary general rule has already been stated: namely, that all charges on the poor-rates are unfounded which are not authorized by some statute. With relation to the exorbitant charges, the general rule is, that all charges are exorbitant, on which the overseers have paid any person for goods or services at a higher rate than such goods or services were offered by any other competent person, or than they might be obtained for by a private individual resident within the same district.

19. The charges which must be struck out as unfounded, are those for relief given to persons who are not legally entitled to it, as not being in a state of necessity from destitution, and with relation to whom the securities prescribed by statute, or by the regulations of the Poor Law Commissioners, under the Poor Law Amendment Act, have not been complied with. By the 9th Geo. I. c. 7, s. 2, it is provided that "no officers of any parish shall (except upon sudden and emergent occasions) bring to the account of the parish any monies he shall give to any poor person of the same parish, who is not registered in such book or books to be kept by the said parish, as a person entitled to receive collection; and as monies for the relief of such persons are directed not to be brought to the account, they must, if entered, be struck out. In unions, the "Pauper Description Book," the "Weekly Relief Book" for out-door paupers, and the "Admission Book" for in-door paupers, prescribed by the Poor Law Commissioners, will supersede the collection book required by the 9th Geo. I.

20. The cases of emergency which may legally be relieved, are generally cases of sudden and calamitous accident; and it is provided by the Poor Law Amendment Act, s. 54, that in parishes included in any union all such relief shall be given in kind, but not in money. The relief to be given will therefore be medicine, food, or clothing, as the nature of the case may be. No case can be considered a case of emergency, when there is time for the parish officers to put the pauper requiring relief upon the collection book as provided, and in general two or three days will be found to be the utmost limits of a case of emergency.

21. Those charges must be deemed unfounded and be disallowed in cases where, although it may have been lawful to give some relief, the relief actually given differs from that directed by the Poor Law Amendment Act, or by other statutes, or by the rules, orders, and regulations of the Poor Law Commissioners. By the 89th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act it is provided: "That all payments, charges, and allowances made by any overseer or guardian, and charged upon the rates for the relief of the poor, contrary to the provisions of this act, or at variance with any rule, order, or regulation of the said Commissioners, made under the authority of this act, shall be and the same are thereby declared to be illegal; any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding. And every justice of the peace is thereby required to disallow, as illegal and unfounded, all payments, charges, or allowances, contrary to the provisions of this act, or to any such rule, order, or regulation of the said Commissioners, which shall be contained in any account of any overseer of the poor or guardian, which shall be presented for the purpose of being passed or allowed. Provided always, that no allowance by any justice shall exonerate or discharge such overseer or guardian from any penalty or legal proceeding to which he may have rendered himself liable by having acted contrary to the rules, orders, and regulations of the said Commissioners, or to the provisions of the act." It will therefore be necessary to bear carefully in mind the rules and orders of the Commissioners as to the mode in which relief is to be given.

22. Those charges must also be disallowed, as unfounded, which are incurred independently of, or against the directions of the board of guardians, if your parish is included in a union, or of a select vestry, or other persons exclusively authorized to give direction in the matter to which the payment relates, or to order relief under the 54th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act; since the only foundation for the charge in such cases is the order of an officer so authorized, the payment must be in obedience to that order, or the charge must be disallowed at the audit.

23. With respect to the charges more commonly found in overseers' accounts, but not authorized by any statute, they are such as follow, namely—

Charges for the performance of services for which the law has not sanctioned any payment:—The duties of overseers are compulsory, and are required to be performed gratuitously. Those upon whom the office is imposed are legally bound to perform the whole of the duties themselves, and are not entitled to charge for assistance. Any of the following charges are therefore entered illegally where treated as payments for the services of constables, vestry clerks, &c.

Charges for coroners' inquests, and charges properly payable out of the church-rates, must be disallowed, as unfounded charges upon the poor-rates; so also

Charges for salaries to overseers, under the title of "permanent overseers."

Charges for the trouble of the overseer or other person in paying county-rates.

Charges for filling up parliamentary returns (except such charges as are allowed by the 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 30, s. 10, for making the population returns.)

Charges for loss of time in attending justices or revising barristers.

Charges for dinners, or other illegal charges usually concealed under the head of "expenses of attendance."

Charges for dinners and the entertainments of parish officers, often concealed under the item, "expenses of meetings," or otherwise.

Charges for the extirpation of vermin; for killing birds and badgers.

Charges for marrying paupers, also fees for churching women, and christening children, when not receiving relief within a workhouse; likewise excessive charges for tolling bells at paupers' funerals.

Charges for the prosecution of public offences: such prosecutions being in no way incidental to the office of overseer, unless made so by the express provision of some statute.

24. The parish officers who are bound to account for the expenditure of the parish monies are also bound to account in a proper form. The accounts of any officer which are not made out conformably to the rules of the Poor Law Commissioners, declaring the manner in which accounts are to be kept, cannot be received.

25. Where a general balance sheet is prepared, without the requisite detail of dates and expenditure, or where gross items are inserted which may conceal the nature of the individual charges and payments, and thus place impediments in the way of determining whether the receipts be completely accounted for, or whether any of the charges are unfounded or exorbitant, the accounts must be disallowed—and no items named "sundries," "miscellaneous," or "incidental expenses," can be admitted, without the whole of the details included under those heads being first fully explained on the face of the account.

26. You must also be prepared to prove that the regulations of the Commissioners for giving notice to the rate-payers have been observed, and that proper opportunities have been afforded to all who choose to examine the accounts; and you must also be prepared to verify upon oath the accuracy of all your charges, if required to do so.

You are requested to transfer this communication to your successors in office.

By order of the Board of Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales,

EDWIN CHADWICK,

Secretary.

4. STATEMENT OF THE DUTIES OF AUDITORS OF UNIONS.

Poor Law Commission Office, Somerset House,
25th June, 1836.

SIR,

ALTHOUGH the order for keeping, examining, and auditing the accounts issued to your union contains a general outline of your duties as auditor, yet as it is impossible in an instrument of that nature to convey such detailed explanations as are necessary for the due understanding of the subject, the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales deem it right to address to you this communication, with the view of relieving you from those doubts and difficulties which (from the various letters of inquiry and applications for information received by the Commissioners,) appear to have embarrassed several of the auditors in the performance of their duties.

The Commissioners were well aware that the introduction of a strict and efficient system of auditing the accounts connected with the relief of the poor, in lieu of the annual examination by the magistrates, which from unavoidable circumstances has in many cases been of a formal nature, might expose the parties bound to account, to some personal loss in consequence of payments made by them, which, although not authorized by law, had the sanction of usage, and which, from having uniformly been made through a long course of years, might have appeared to be both legal and necessary. The Commissioners accordingly directed the enclosed instructional letter to be transmitted previous to the Commencement of the last quarter, to all parochial and union officers bound to account, containing full information as to the description of the expenditure which they are by law authorized to continue. To this letter they request your particular attention, as it will serve also for your own guidance as to the monies which it will be your duty to see brought to account; and likewise as to the description of the charges which you will be bound to disallow.

1. The first step, as a preliminary to the audit, will be to forward a notice to the union officers, for the production of the accounts; and also to direct the clerk of the union to cause notice to be served on the several parish officers of the parishes included in the union, who are still bound to account.

2. These notices should be sent, or served, six clear days previous to the respective days which you shall appoint for the audit of the union and parochial accounts respectively. You should ascertain also that notice of the day appointed for the audit of the union accounts has been affixed to the door of the workhouse, and that the union ledger, and the abstract of the union accounts, have been left open in the board room of the guardians for the inspection of the rate-payers.

3. When the accounts are submitted to you, it will be your duty to see that they are made out in the form prescribed by the Commissioners. You will observe that by the before-mentioned order for keeping, examining, and auditing accounts, it is directed that the clerk to the board of guardians shall, at the common charge of the union, provide the requisite books and forms of accounts. Where proper books have not been provided, you will give instructions for immediately supplying the deficiency, and if you deem it necessary you will report the omission to this office; and where the accounts have been erroneously entered, you will take measures for the prevention of the irregularity in future. You will bear in mind always, that a main part of your duty as an auditor will be to examine, as part of the accounts, all returns or books ordered to be kept as a record of any operations or matters which relate to the management of the relief. You will therefore examine the pauper description lists; the medical relief lists; the register of sickness and mortality; to see that they are correctly made out, observing that these accounts are to be kept to show the main facts upon which relief is given, and serve as the justification of the officer and the board of guardians in granting relief, and also a record of the treatment given. You will also see that in the quarterly union abstracts, the quantities as well as the qualities, and the prices of the goods supplied are correctly stated, and returned to the commissioners. The officers will be responsible for any essential mis-statement contained in these accounts.

4. Having ascertained that the necessary preliminaries and forms have been observed, you will enter upon an examination of the accounts in detail. In order to facilitate such examination, the commissioners have to offer to you the following instructions and explanations; and first, as respects the parochial accounts. In the parochial as well as in the union accounts, you will ascertain that all sums which ought to be received, and all sums which have been actually received, are duly accounted for; and that all that is stated to have been expended has actually been expended: and you will determine whether the actual expenditure is truly stated, and has been made in conformity to the law.

5. You will observe that it forms no part of your duties as auditor to determine questions as to the proportions or equality of the assessment; the justices at sessions being the proper judges to decide on such points.

6. After the examination of the rate books, and the collectors' accounts, you will next call for the terriers of lands and inventories of stock, and see that the income from those sources, if applicable to parish purposes, is properly brought to account. You will also examine the paupers' description lists for the cases of those to whom relief has been given by way of loan; as well as of persons bound to contribute towards the support of pauper relations, and ascertain the amount of arrear, and the amount recovered, of this class of payments.

4. *Duties of

7. It is your duty to aid to the utmost in the advancement of a regular systematised and efficient management in parishes and unions, and it may be considered as evidence of improved management when the minor sources of income, and the outlets of expenditure (which have hitherto been most frequently overlooked,) are found to be vigilantly examined and secured. See Paragraph 13 of the Instructional Letter to Parish Officers.

8. In examining the accounts of the relieving officers you will not pass charges for relief given to any person whom the guardians did not previously authorize the officers to relieve, or the relief which the guardians did not confirm after it was given.

9. In auditing this description of accounts, you will keep constantly in view the orders of the Commissioners for regulating the mode in which relief may be given to the various classes of paupers. You will examine the pauper description lists, to ascertain how far the descriptions are truly and completely entered by the proper officer; and you will then compare them with the statements of the amount of relief actually given, and especially examine the cases of emergency, and the alleged grounds of deviation from the prescribed and ordinary mode of administering relief, if such shall occur.

10. As regards casual relief, from the facilities arising from neglect, consequent on the trivial nature of the items, when viewed separately, and from the too easy admission of overcharges as mistakes, considerable frauds have been heretofore committed in this description of expenditure. You will therefore let no such class of items pass without due inquiry and investigation.

11. When you find that the relief which has been given to a pauper of any class has been given in contravention of the orders and regulations of the Commissioners, you are bound to disallow such relief.

12. In examining the accounts of the master of the workhouse, you will ascertain that all the goods have been duly ordered; and you will compare the quantities of provisions consumed, with the number of paupers actually in the workhouse at different periods of the quarter, as shown in the admission and discharge book, and you must allow no charge to pass in respect of any pauper who was not regularly admitted.

13. With regard to the books of the medical officer, you will have to consult them chiefly in order to see that the descriptions of the maladies of the paupers in the relieving officers' books are correct, and that the allowances of wine and diet or other special relief for the sick appearing in the books of the relieving officer or the master of the workhouse, were duly sanctioned by the medical officer, and approved by the guardians.

14. You will check the several chief accounts in the manner following:—The out-relief account in the ledger, by comparing it with the subsidiary books of the relieving officer, and the weekly minutes of the settlement of the same in the minute book of the board of guardians; the in-maintenance account, by comparing it with the subsidiary relief lists and provision book of the master of the workhouse, and the weekly minutes of the settlement of the same in the minute book, and with the clothing account in the ledger; the establishment charges, by comparing all salaries and other payments necessary to be sanctioned by the Poor Law Commissioners with their orders thereon, and with the minutes of the guardians, and the bills and vouchers applicable thereto; the treasurer's account, with the minute book, and the several checks directed therein to be drawn.

15. Where the clerk is an attorney, and brings in a bill for professional services, which he considers not to be expressly or impliedly remunerated by his salary, you must refer to the terms of his engagement as to his claim to such extra remuneration for any other expenditure than his costs out of pocket. If the terms of his engagement do not include his professional services, you must regard him first solely in his capacity of clerk, and allow no extra charge for any work or services which the clerk if he had not been a professional man might have performed; and then you must consider him in his professional capacity as a person unconnected with the union, and require that the board's authority be produced for the undertaking of the proceedings or other business which are the subject of the charge, and which would not come within his general duty as clerk.

16. Where the law has made an exemption from any charge in favour of the rate-payers, the advantage of the exemption should not be allowed to be lost through the negligence or inadvertence of the officers. Thus the appointments of paid officers of the union; and all instruments made in pursuance of the orders of the Commissioners, are exempted from stamp duty by the 86th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, as are indentures of parish apprentices by the Stamp Act.

17. In carrying through the audit, you will bear in mind that clearness and apparent completeness is not a proof of truth in the accounts; and whilst you pass no obscurity in them without investigation, you should not pass even an orderly stated account on trust; but should from time to time select items, indiscriminately or otherwise, from each class of charges, and ascertain their reality and correctness.

18. You will observe generally, whether the items which you collate in the accounts intended to check each other, have reference to the same subject; and whether the dates, names, persons, places, and other circumstances properly correspond.

19. In the course of the detailed examination, you should note down in writing every error in casting; every erasure which tends to throw suspicion upon particular charges, items, or vouchers; every deficiency or irregularity in the vouchers, or in the general correctness and truth of the transactions, together with any deviation from the orders of the commissioners, or the provisions of the law, and any expenditure of an unusual or exceptionable description.

20. Any doubts which you may deem of sufficient importance, you may refer to the Poor Law Commissioners, or to their Assistant Commissioner, who will give you their opinion and advice upon the subject.

21. The amount of all disallowances and surcharges must be charged against the person accounting; and should there not be a balance to cover the amount in the current quarter, the difference may be carried forward against him in the succeeding quarter's account. But, ordinarily, it should be required to be paid at the time; and if not paid, it will be your duty to report the same to the Commissioners, and under their directions to take proceedings for recovering the amount, in the same manner as penalties under the Poor Law Amendment Act.

22. Where it appears to you that the accounts of any paid officer are fraudulent, or so far incompletely kept, from negligence or wilfulness as to prove his incompetency, it will be your duty immediately to report the circumstances to the Commissioners.

23. In order to illustrate the routine of an audit, the following specimens are given of the vouchers and evidence required to sustain a few items of charge.

Items of Charges.	Vouchers, &c. required to support the Items.
1. Buildings on account of the union or parish	Resolution of board of guardians thereon. The Poor Law Commissioners' order or sanction. Copy of the contract with the builder, &c. and the plan. The surveyor's certificate of the work executed, and that it has been done to his satisfaction. The minute of the board of guardians to the same effect, at the close of the quarter.
2. Furniture	Besides the usual authorities and vouchers, call for the inventory, and see that the articles are duly inserted; if necessary, trace or require them to be pointed out.
3. Law expenses	The board's direction to the attorney. The attorney's bill (taxed, if taxable, by the proper officer.) The board's order to pay the bill. The receipt in full of all demands respecting the subject-matter.

4. Duties of Auditors.

Items of Charges.	Vouchers, &c. required to support the Items.
4. Bread made and consumed ..	Compare the quantities of flour or wheat purchased, with the proportion of bread produced.
5. Articles sold	Compare the cash accounts with the store accounts.
Articles destroyed, lost, or wasted	Require a certificate or proof of the destruction, loss, or waste.
6. Salaries of officers and servants of the union	The appointment by the board of guardians, and the sanction of the board of Poor Law Commissioners.

24. If there be an increase of the number of any class of paupers, or in any branch of the expenditure, you will report thereon, and state the cause of it as far as you can ascertain, for the information of the Commissioners ; as also on any decrease arising from any peculiar occurrence within the union. You will likewise be pleased to report to them any improvements of which the mode of transacting the business of the union may appear to you to be susceptible ; and generally on any matters connected with the state of pauperism in the union, or in the district in which it is situate.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,

Your very obedient Servant,
EDWIN CHADWICK, Secretary.

To the Auditor of the Union.

2. Camely.
3. Hinton Blewett.
4. Stowey.
&c. &c.

1. Number and Constituency of Guardians.

1. Number and Constituency of Guardians.

1. The number of the guardians shall be , of which number shall be elected for the parish of ; two for each of the parishes of ; and one for each of the other parishes in the union.
2. But the same person may be elected guardian for more than one parish, agreeably to sec. 40 of the Poor Law Amendment Act.

2. Duration of the Office.

2. Duration of the Office.

The guardians first elected will continue in office until the day hereinafter appointed for the annual election of guardians, and thenceforward the said office shall be held for one year; but the same person who may have been a guardian for any past year may be re-elected a guardian for any ensuing year.

3. Qualification of Guardians.

Any person who shall be rated to the poor-rate in some parish in the union, in respect of hereditaments, of the annual value or rental of not less than twenty-five pounds, and who, within two years next previous to the day of election, shall not have been dismissed from any office in any parish or union by order of the Poor Law Commissioners, shall be eligible as a guardian for any of the said parishes.

4. Qualification of Voters for Guardians, and Scale of Voters.

1. Any rate payer who shall have been rated to the poor-rate in any parish in the union for the whole year immediately preceding his voting, and shall have paid the parochial rates and assessments made on him for one whole year, as well as those due from him at the time of voting, except those which have been made or become due within the six months immediately preceding such voting, will be entitled, on the election of the guardian or guardians for such parish, to the number and proportion of votes specified in sect. 40 of the Poor Law Amendment Act; that is to say,--

If he be rated or assessed at any sum under 200 l.	he will have 1 vote.
If he be rated or assessed at 200 l. but under 400 l.	he will have 2 votes.
And if rated or assessed at 400 l. or upwards	he will have 3 votes.

2. Any owner of ratable property, situate within any such parish, who shall have given to one of the churchwardens and overseers thereof, on any day previous to the day on which he shall claim to vote, a statement, in writing, of his name and address, and the description of the property in the parish or place, as owner whereof he claims to vote, will be entitled to have the same number and proportion of votes, on the election of the guardian or guardians for such parish as is provided for inhabitants and other persons by the Parish Vestry Acts, 58 Geo. III. c. 69, and 59 Geo. III. c. 85; that is to say,--

If the aggregate amount of the assessment for the time being of any property belonging to such owner in such parish, or on any person or persons in respect of the same to the poor rate, shall not amount to 50 l.	he will have 1 vote.
If the same shall amount to 50 l. and not to 75 l.	he will have 2 votes.
If the same shall amount to 75 l. and not to 100 l.	he will have 3 votes.
If the same shall amount to 100 l. and not to 125 l.	he will have 4 votes.
If the same shall amount to 125 l. and not to 150 l.	he will have 5 votes.
And if the same shall amount to 150 l. or upwards	he will have 6 votes.

3. Any owner who shall be bona fide an occupier of any such property will be entitled to vote, as well in respect of his occupation as of his being such owner.

4. The form marked A. hereto annexed, may be followed by owners of property, in making such statements of their claims to vote.

5. Any owner of such property may from time to time, by writing under his hand, appoint any person to vote as his proxy; but such proxy must, previous to the day of election, give to one of the churchwardens and overseers of such parish, a statement, in writing, of the name and address of his principal, and a description of the property in the parish or place, as proxy to the owner whereof he claims to vote; and also an original or attested copy of the writing, appointing him such proxy.

6. The forms marked B. 1 and 2, hereto annexed, may be followed by owners of property in appointing proxies, and by such proxies in making their claims.

7. The churchwardens and overseers shall enter in the rate-books of such parish, or in some other book, to be from time to time provided for that purpose, the names and addresses of the owners and their proxies, who shall send such statements, and the assessment of the poor-rate on the property, in respect whereof they severally claim to vote.

8. The register or book of the statements of owners who have claimed to vote, and of proxies, may be kept in the form marked C., hereto annexed.

5. Days of Election.

5. Days of Election.

The following shall be the days for the election of guardians:—

For the first election of guardians the day of election shall be the second day of February next.

For the annual election of guardians the day of election shall be the first Thursday after the 25th day of March in each year.

6. Notice of the Election.

6. Notice of the Election.

1. The churchwardens and overseers of every such parish shall fill up and sign, and shall, on or before the twenty-third day of this instant January, affix on the principal door of every church and chapel within such parish, or in such other place as is ordinarily made use of for affixing notices of parochial business, a notice in writing according to the form marked D., hereto annexed, of the first election of guardians, and shall also give such notice in such other mode as may usually have been adopted in the parish for giving notice of parochial business.

2. Of the annual elections the clerk to the board of guardians shall, from year to year, give thirteen whole days' notice, in the form marked E., by an advertisement, to be inserted at the expense of the union, in some newspaper or newspapers generally circulated in the district wherein the place of meeting of the guardians of such union shall be situate; but the rest of the proceedings of the annual election shall be conducted by the churchwardens and overseers of the said respective parishes as in the case of the first election.

7. Mode of proposing a Guardian.

7. Mode of proposing a Guardian.

1. Any rate payer or owner of property in any parish in the union, being entitled to vote, may propose as a guardian or guardians for such parish, any person or persons, not exceeding the number to be elected for such parish, having the qualification hereinbefore prescribed for that office.

2. Any person having such qualification may propose himself for that office.

3. In either of the above-mentioned cases the proposer shall, at least six whole days before the day of election, deliver or cause to be delivered to one of the churchwardens or overseers a nomination in writing, according to the form marked F. hereto annexed.

8. Mode of Election.

8. Mode of Election.

1. The churchwardens and overseers of every such parish shall examine, within two days next after the last day upon which the names of the persons proposed as candidates could be delivered in, the nomination papers which have been delivered to them.

2. If any person put in nomination for the office of guardian shall, by writing under his hand, delivered or sent to such churchwardens and overseers, declare his refusal to execute that office, he shall not be considered to be a candidate for the same.

3. If the number of candidates duly qualified and duly proposed as aforesaid for such parish shall not exceed the number to be then elected, the candidates so proposed shall be declared duly elected.

4. But if the number of candidates so duly qualified and proposed as aforesaid shall exceed the number to be then elected, the churchwardens and overseers shall prepare or cause to be prepared a sufficient number of voting papers, according to the form marked G., hereto annexed.

5. Two days at least before the day fixed for the election the churchwardens and overseers shall deliver or cause to be delivered such voting papers at the houses of those persons and proxies who are entitled to vote, and are resident within such parish.

6. On the day of election the churchwardens and overseers shall call for and collect the said voting papers which have been so delivered.

7. All persons and proxies who are entitled to vote, but are not resident within such parish, and all persons who entitle themselves to vote on or after the day on which such voting papers are delivered, either by delivering such statement as above mentioned, or by paying up arrears of rate or otherwise, shall, on the day of election, apply for voting papers at the place appointed by the churchwardens and overseers for that purpose (who are hereby required to furnish the same), and having filled up such voting papers, shall deliver them to the churchwardens and overseers, or the person employed by them to collect such voting papers, before noon on the day of election.

5. Specimen of the Form of a Union.

8. No person employed in distributing or collecting the voting papers, or otherwise executing these orders, shall canvass the voters for any candidate, or do any thing by which the return of any candidate, or of any class of candidates, may be unduly influenced.

9. In the afternoon of the day of election the churchwardens and overseers shall add up the votes given in the form prescribed; and the candidate or candidates (as the case may be), having the majority of votes shall be duly elected.

10. But in such calculation of votes every person who shall not vote, or shall not comply with the directions herein contained for the giving and returning of votes, shall be omitted.

9. Notice of the Appointment and Return of Guardians.

9. Notice of the Appointment and Return of Guardians.

The churchwardens and overseers of each such parish and place shall forthwith notify to the guardian or guardians elected, the fact of his or their election by a letter or communication in writing, in the form marked H., hereto annexed, signed by them; and shall affix on the principal door of every church and chapel in such parish and place a notice of the guardian or guardians elected, in the form marked I., hereto annexed; and shall also make to the first meeting of the board of guardians next after such election, a return in writing in the form marked J., hereto annexed, of the guardian or guardians so elected.

10. Explanation of Terms.

10. Explanation of Terms.

1. Whenever the signatures of the churchwardens and overseers are required in this order to be subscribed to any notice or other document appertaining in any manner to the said elections, it shall not be necessary that the signatures of more than two of the churchwardens and overseers, or either of them, be subscribed to the same.

2. Whenever the word "parish" is used in this order it shall be taken to include any tything, hamlet, or place separately maintaining its poor, and hereinbefore directed to be united.

Given under the hands and seal of us, the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, this thirteenth day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.

WHEREAS, under and by virtue of an order, bearing date the day of one thousand eight hundred and thirty under the seal of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, acting under the powers and authorities of an act passed in the 4th and 5th years of the reign of his present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," it was declared that the several parishes of in the county of should be united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, by the name of the union, and that a board of guardians should be elected for such union, and whereas such board of guardians hath been duly elected accordingly. And whereas, by an order under the seal of the said Poor Law Commissioners, bearing date the day of last, it was ordered and directed that the said guardians should appoint a fit and proper person to be the collector of the rates for the relief of the poor of the parishes and places comprised in the said union; and it was by the said order declared that the following should be the duties of such collector, that is to say;—

1. To assist the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes in making the assessments, and in keeping all books, and in making all returns which relate to the collection of rates or rents, or of any monies whatsoever payable on account of the poor rates.
2. To collect all monies payable on account of the poor rates, or as rents, or arising from any of the sources of income set forth in the order of the said Poor Law Commissioners for keeping the books of receipts and payments.
3. To pay weekly into the hands of the treasurer of the union all monies received on account of the several parishes, as often as he, the collector, should have more than fifty pounds in his hands, but to make no other payment or disbursement whatever on account of the union, or of any parish comprised therein.
4. To institute and to attend to all proceedings against all persons who make default in the payment of monies due by them to any of the parishes in the union, either in respect of poor rates or otherwise.
5. To attend the weekly meetings of the board of guardians, and generally to observe and fulfil all lawful orders and directions of the said board of guardians, and likewise the rules, orders, and regulations relating to the said union already or to be hereafter issued by the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales.

And it was thereby further ordered and directed, that the person so to be appointed as aforesaid should, before he entered on the performance of the duties of his office, give such security for the due and proper discharge of the same as should appear to the said guardians to be necessary and fitting. And whereas, at a meeting of the said guardians, held on the day of , was duly appointed a collector for the said union, and he was required by the said guardians to enter into a bond with two proper sureties for the proper discharge of the duties of his office, and he hath requested the above-bounden and to join with him as sureties in the above-written bond, subject to the condition hereunder written, to which they have assented, and the said guardians have agreed to accept of them as such sureties for the said accordingly.

NOW THE CONDITION of the above-written obligation is such, that if the above-bounden shall, during his continuance in the said office of collector, well and truly fulfil the several duties set forth and enjoined in the said order and hereinbefore recited, and also shall, when thereunto required by the said guardians, or by the said Poor Law Commissioners, or as the said guardians or Poor Law Commissioners may direct, render a full, just, and true account of the monies from time to time received and paid by the said as such collector, so that the exact amount collected by him, and the balance, if any, remaining in his hands may clearly appear; and also shall from time to time, and at all times during his continuance in the said office of collector, in all respects and particulars, well and truly observe, fulfil and keep, all the lawful orders and directions of the said board of guardians, and likewise all and every the rules, orders, and regulations of the said Poor Law Commissioners, which are now, or shall from time to time be in force, in any of the said several parishes so far as the same shall apply or extend to his said office, or to any of the duties thereof, and particularly shall provide and keep such books and accounts as are or shall be required by the said orders and directions of the said guardians, or by

To the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of the said Parish.

Gentlemen,

By the direction of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, I transmit to you the following papers relating to the sale of certain premises, the property of your parish, and to which your attention is particularly directed.

They consist of—

Copy of a request for such sale from the Guardians of the Poor of the above Union.

Order to you for convening a Meeting of the Rate-payers and Owners of Property in your Parish to consent to such sale.

A Form of Notice of Meeting, to be used by you, and to be given and affixed in like manner as Vestry Meetings are generally called in your Parish.

A Form of Resolution to be put to the Meeting giving such consent.

And, lastly, A Form of Certificate of the Meeting having been duly held, and the Resolution duly passed, to be signed by the Minister and yourselves, and returned to the Poor Law Commissioners accompanied by attested copies of the Notice of Meeting and Resolution.

With reference to the taking of votes at the meeting, you will be careful that the names of the rate-payers and owners of property, present in person, or (as respects owners) by proxy at such meeting, are duly entered in the vestry book. After the entry of the resolution, in the form herewith sent, you will

To the Guardians of the Poor of the above Union.

Gentlemen,

IN reply to your application dated the day of , touching the sale of certain property of the above parish, I now transmit to you by the direction of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales, the requisite consent of the rate-payers and owners of property in the said parish; and also an order directing you to proceed in such sale in such manner as you may deem most expedient, subject, however, to the conditions of sale therein referred to, among such others as the circumstances of the case may require.

Such additional terms should, of course, protect the parish and yourselves from the burden of legal difficulties and costs, and ensure the benefit of the simplified modes of conveyance suggested by the recent act. On receipt of the draft conveyance, you will forward it to the Poor Law Commissioners for their approbation; but if, on its perusal, or on considering any other papers you may find necessary to submit to them, any professional expenses be incurred, they must be borne by the parish on whose behalf they will be incurred.

With reference to the application of any purchase money, in this or any other instance, or the disposal of any property taken in exchange, such further order for the permanent advantage of the parish or union entitled thereto, shall be hereafter made as the commissioners may see fit: and until such order be issued, the amount must be paid into the hands of the treasurer, and be placed by him to an account intituled "The Guardians of the Poor of the Union, in the matter of the sale of certain Property belonging to the Parish of Form No. 10.—Conditions of Sale.

1. In case any purchaser shall be desirous of investigating the title, an abstract shall be prepared and furnished at his cost, and all expenses attending such investigation, or arising out of the same, or of completing the title, and the costs of procuring or making all official and other copies, or extracts, counterparts or duplicates of deeds, wills, or other documents, and of preparing, perusing, and approving deeds of covenant, and the like, shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendors previously to or as the same shall be incurred, and the purchaser shall not be entitled to require any further investigation or evidence, while any previous expenses of or connected with the investigation of the title or the evidence shall remain unsatisfied; nor shall the purchaser have any claim whatever for reimbursement, or be entitled to refuse or delay payment in respect of any expenses incurred in case the purchase shall not be completed; and the vendors shall not be required to do any act for completing the sale beyond obtaining the approbation by the Poor Law Commissioners and guardians of the draft of conveyance, and the affixing of their respective seals to the conveyance when approved. But unless the purchaser shall, by writing under his hand or the hand of his solicitor, call for such abstract and state his intention of investigating the title within seven days from the day of sale, he shall be deemed to have waived his right to do so; and notwithstanding such abstract being called for, the purchaser shall be deemed to be satisfied with the title of the vendors, unless he shall have delivered to the vendors his objections to the title or requisition for completing the same, in writing, within fourteen days from the delivery of such abstract.

2. The purchase money shall be paid to _____ the treasurer of the union, and the conveyance executed on or before the _____ day of _____, and the purchaser, on the payment of the purchase money and the execution of such conveyance, shall be let into possession or become entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits, and the purchaser shall accept the receipt of such treasurer as a sufficient discharge.

3. In case the completion of the purchase shall from any reason whatever be delayed beyond the _____ day of _____, the purchaser shall pay to the vendors interest after the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum on the amount of his purchase money unpaid, and shall not be entitled to any compensation on any pretext for his purchase money, or any part thereof, having been unproductive.

4. The seal of office of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales affixed to any document shall be conclusive evidence as to all the facts therein stated or noticed, and as to the powers of the vendors as guardians of the union.

5. In case of sale or exchange, no other covenant shall be required of the conveying parties, except one, that they have done no act to incumber the property disposed of.

6. If the purchaser shall neglect or fail to comply with the above stipulations, or any of them, or any part thereof, the deposit paid by him and all other payment previously made by or due from the purchaser, under or in respect of the sale or of these conditions, shall be absolutely forfeited to the vendors, and they shall be at full liberty to resell the property either by public auction or private contract, on such conditions of sale and in such manner as they shall think fit; and the deficiency (if any) occasioned by such second sale, together with all expenses attending the same, shall immediately after the same sale be made good to the vendors by the said purchaser at this sale, and in case of the non-payment of the same, the whole thereof shall be recoverable by the vendors as and for liquidated damages, and it shall not be necessary to previously tender a conveyance to the purchaser.

24. Notice of appeal against poor rates made under local acts, and directed to churchwardens and overseers, and several pri-

To the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor, and Vestry-men, of the parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist; and to Messrs. A. B. and C. D.; Messrs. John Elliott, Esq., and Company, J. Goding, &c. [Here a great many persons were named.]

I do hereby, on the part and behalf of the Gas Light and Coke Company, and as their attorney, give you notice, that they intend at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden at the Guildhall, in and for the city of Westminster and liberties thereof, on Thursday the twenty-first day of October, instant, to enter and prosecute an appeal against a rate or assessment, purporting to be made on the twenty-fifth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, pursuant to the directions of an act of parliament, made and passed in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty George the Second, intituled "An act for the better relief and employment of the poor in the parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, in the city of Westminster; and for cleansing the streets and repairing the highways within the said parishes," and purporting to be an equal pound rate or assessment, for the relief of the poor, repair of the highways, and cleansing the streets in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, in the city of Westminster, upon all and every the person and persons who inhabit, hold, occupy, or enjoy any land, house, shop, wharf, warehouse, or other building within the said parishes, or either of them, or any other person or persons who by law are chargeable and assessable for and towards the relief of the poor within the said parishes, pursuant to the before-mentioned act. And, whereas, the said Gas Light and Coke Company, in and by the said rate or assessment, are rated as occupiers in the following form.

The Gas Light and Coke Company for land, house, warehouses, and buildings, situate in the Horseferry Road, in the said parish of Saint John the Evangelist, and the mains or pipes and other apparatus for the conveyance of gas belonging to the said company, situate being and fixed in the ground in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, at the annual value of five hundred pounds, each instalment two hundred and fifty pounds.

And, whereas, the said Gas Light and Coke Company, in pursuance of the provisions of the above-mentioned statute, paid the said rate or assessment of twenty-five pounds, on the twenty-first day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, to the person duly authorised to receive the same: I, as the attorney of the said Gas Light and Coke Company, do further give you and each of you notice on their behalf, that they find themselves aggrieved by the said rate or assessment, and that the grounds and causes of their appeal are,—

1st. That there is no SEPARATE assessment upon the land, house, warehouses, and buildings, situate in the Horseferry Road, distinct from the assessment on the said mains or pipes and other apparatus, so that they are unable to ascertain on what sum they are assessed for the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, and on what sums they are assessed for the said mains or pipes, and other apparatus.

2nd. That they are not liable to be rated or assessed for the said mains or pipes and other apparatus, as being fixed in the ground in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, inasmuch as they have no title or interest to, or in the said ground, otherwise than the privilege of laying their mains or pipes and other apparatus under the surface thereof.

3d. That they are not liable to be rated or assessed for the said mains or pipes and other apparatus in the conveyance of gas, inasmuch as the said mains or pipes and other apparatus form part of their stock in trade, and the said Gas Light and Coke Company are not resident inhabitants of the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, or either of them.

4th. That they are not liable to be rated or assessed for the said mains or pipes and other apparatus, inasmuch as the said mains or pipes and other apparatus forming part of their stock in trade, they are rated for their stock in trade, and not for the profits arising therefrom.

5th. And further, that if the said rate or assessment of five thousand pounds is meant to be an assessment upon the value of the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, and upon the profits arising from the said mains or pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of Gas, the said sum of five thousand pounds greatly exceeds the fair annual value of the same.

6th. And further, that if the said rate or assessment of five thousand pounds is meant to be an assessment upon the value of the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, and in respect of the occupation of land by the said Company, by their said mains, pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of Gas, and also from the profits arising from the said mains, pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of Gas, the said sum of five thousand pounds—greatly exceeds the fair annual value of the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, and the occupation of the said land by the said company, by the said mains, pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of Gas, and the annual amount of the said profits added together.

7th. And further, that the said rate or assessment of five thousand pounds, greatly exceeds the annual value of the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, and of the said mains or pipes, and other apparatus.

8th. And further, that the inhabitants of the said several parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, exercising trades, businesses and other concerns, in the said parishes, and having stock in trade in the said parishes, and who derive a profit from such their several trades, businesses, and concerns, these are not rated and assessed in the said rate for and in respect of the profits of such their said trades, businesses, and concerns, and upon their several stocks in trade there.

9th. And further, that the following inhabitants of the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, are not rated and assessed in the said rate, for the profits of their trades, businesses, and concerns, carried on in the said parishes, and upon their several stocks in trade there, [that is to say] Messrs. Seager, Evans and Stafford, distillers, are rated in the said rate for their house and distillery, in the said parish of Saint John the Evangelist, of two hundred and fifty pounds, but are not rated in the said rate, for and in respect of the profits made in their business or concerns of distillers, nor for their machinery, utensils, and other apparatus, nor for their stock in trade of their distillery, in the said parishes. J. Elliott, Esq. & Company, brewers, are rated in the said rate for their house, &c., [here the same description was repeated as to Seager & Co.] and as to a great many other firms and individuals, in the terms stated respecting Messrs. Seager & Co., showing in substance that they were rated in respect of their buildings, but not in respect of their profits in trade.

Then followed a numerous list of tradesmen and manufacturers, who alleged as objections to the rate, they were not rated in respect of their implements of trade, &c., viz.—G. Boys, coal-merchant, &c. Also that the said Gas Light and Coke Company are in the said rate or assessment over-rated, in respect of the yearly value of the said land, house, warehouses, and buildings, mains or pipes, and other apparatus, according to the principle of rating adopted in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, by assessing a certain proportion only of the real annual value of rateable property in those parishes. Also, that the said rate is in other respects partial, unjust, and illegal. And further take notice, that you are to produce at the time of hearing this appeal, the said rate, purporting to have been made on the 25th day of May, 1830, as aforesaid. And also, all the rates or assessments made for the relief of the poor, repair of the highways, and cleansing the streets of the said several parishes, since the year 1828. Dated the 6th day of October, 1830.

Yours, &c. A. B. C. D. &c.

25. Petition of appeal against a poor's rate (a).

To the Worshipful His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the county of _____ in their general quarter sessions of the peace, assembled.

The Petition and Appeal of A. B., an inhabitant, assessed to the poor's rate of the parish of _____ in the said county.

Sheweth,

That a rate or assessment was made on or about the _____ day of _____ last past, and published [or said to be published] in the church of the said parish on or about Sunday, the _____ day of _____ last past, by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish, and for other the purposes therein mentioned, by virtue whereof your petitioner and other inhabitants of the said parish, are charged and assessed in divers large sums of money for the purposes aforesaid.

That your petitioner is in and by the said rate assessed for the rateable property occupied by him in the said parish, at a larger sum of money than he ought to be assessed at, in respect of the annual value of the same; and also that your petitioner [state the other causes of appeal, as in the notice].

That the names of E. F. and G. H., persons occupying rateable property in the said parish, are omitted in the said rate or assessment, and are not charged or assessed in the said rate for two messuages, tenements, or dwelling-houses, which they respectively occupy within the said parish of _____

Your petitioner, therefore, conceiving himself to be aggrieved by the said rate or assessment, doth hereby appeal to your worships against the same, and requests that a day may be appointed, in this present session, for the hearing and determining the said appeal, and that you will thereupon quash the said rate, or alter and amend the same in such manner, and grant to your petitioner such relief in the premises, as to you shall seem meet.

And your petitioner will pray, &c.

E. F., Solicitor to the Petitioner.

I do hereby give you notice, that I intend at the next general quarter sessions of the peace, to be holden in and for the county of N., at N., on Thursday, the thirtieth day of April, instant, to enter and try an appeal [entered or by an appeal at the last general quarter sessions of the peace holden at N., aforesaid, in the county aforesaid,] against a certain rate or assessment, intituled [copy the title of the rate,] for the following, amongst other reasons:

1st. Because the said rate or assessment has not been made, published and allowed, in due course of law.

Eight several grounds of appeal.

2d. Because the rate is made for other purposes than for the relief of the poor.

3d. Because I am assessed at too large a sum, and in an unfair proportion in comparison with the sum and proportion assessed on A. B., C. D., or one of them.

4th. Because I am assessed at a greater sum than I ought to be assessed at.

5th. Because the persons hereinbefore named, or some of them, are assessed at less sums than they ought to be assessed at.

6th. Because the said persons are not assessed at all for lands and houses which were in their occupation when the said rate was made.

7th. Because the said persons, or some of them, are not assessed to the full value of their local visible property within the said parish.

8th. Because I am assessed for property which was not in my occupation at the time of making the said rate, and for other property which is not liable to be assessed to the relief of the poor.

9th. Because it does not sufficiently appear on the said rate what persons thereby assessed are charged.

10th. Because certain persons are assessed for parts of certain farms, houses, and lands, but such part is altogether uncertain and indefinite.

11th. Because it does not appear, whether the persons assessed are charged as occupiers of lands, &c. or as inhabitants.

12th. Because the profits of the property for which I am assessed are devoted to public purposes, and there is no beneficial occupier.

At the general quarter sessions of the peace of our lord the king, holden at the Guildhall, in the Sanctuary, Westminster, in and for the liberty of the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Saint Peter, Westminster, the City, Borough, and Town, of Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, and Saint Martin-le-Grand, London, on Thursday, the twenty-first day of October, in the first year of the reign of our Sovereign lord William the Fourth, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty, before Francis Const, chairman, William Thornton, and George Saunders, esquires, and others, their fellows justices of our said lord the king, assigned to keep the peace in the Liberty aforesaid, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors, committed in the same liberty.

The Governor and Company of Chelsea Water-works, appellants; and the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of the parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, Westminster, respondents.

Whereas the Governor and Company of Chelsea Water-works did, by James Wortham, their solicitor, at this present session, exhibit their petition and appeal, setting forth, that a rate or assessment, purporting to be made on the twenty-fifth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty, pursuant to the directions of an act of parliament made and passed in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty, George the Second, intituled, "An Act for the better relief and employment of the poor in the parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, in the city of Westminster, and for cleansing the streets and repairing the highways within the said parishes," and purporting to be an equal pound rate or assessment for the relief of the poor, repair of the highways, and cleansing the streets in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, in the city of Westminster, upon all and every the person and persons who inhabited, held, occupied, or enjoyed, any land, house, shop, wharf, warehouse, or other building, within the said parishes, or either of them, or any other person or persons who, by law, were chargeable and assessable for and towards the relief of the poor within the said parishes, pursuant to the before-mentioned act.

That the petitioners, in and by the said rate or assessment, were rated as occupiers, in the following form:—"The governor and company of the Chelsea Water-works, for messuage or tenement in Great Queen Street, in the parish of Saint Margaret, used main pipes and other apparatus for the conveyance of water, belonging to the said corporation, situate, being, and fixed in the ground in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist;—annual value, five hundred pounds each; instalment, twenty-five pounds. That the petitioners, in pursuance of the provisions of the above-mentioned statute, paid the said rate or instalment of twenty-five pounds, on the twenty-fourth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty, to the person duly authorised to receive the same. And that the petitioners found themselves aggrieved by the said rate or assessment. Now, upon hearing the said appeal, and what hath been alleged by the said respective parties and their counsel in and concerning the premises, this court doth order, adjudge, and determine, that the said appellants are liable to be rated for messuage or tenement in Great Queen Street, in the parish of Saint Margaret, and mains, pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of water belonging to the said corporation, situate, being, and fixed in the ground in the said parishes of Saint Margaret and Saint John the Evangelist, towards the relief of the poor, of repair of the highways, and cleansing the streets as aforesaid, of the said parishes. And doth further order, that the hearing and determining the said appeal, as to the sum at which the said appellants should be rated for the same, be and the same is hereby adjourned until the next general quarter session of the peace, to be holden for this city and liberty. And it is, by and with the consent of the said parties and their counsel, ordered that it be referred to the Honourable Thomas Erskine, one of his Majesty's counsel, learned in the law, to ascertain and certify to the said next general quarter session of the peace, upon what sum the said governor and company ought, in such rate or assessment, to be rated and assessed, so as the said referee do make his certificate in writing, of and concerning the matter hereby referred, ready to be delivered to the said parties, or either of them, on or before the tenth day of January next, with liberty for the said referee, under his hand in writing at the foot hereof, from time to time, so long as he shall think fit to enlarge the time for making his said certificate.

And it is, by the like consent, further ordered that the witnesses, to be examined before the said referee touching the matters aforesaid, shall be sworn before the court of general quarter sessions of the peace, now holding, or before some court of general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the said city and liberty, or before a justice of the peace for the said city and liberty; and that the said appellants and respondents shall respectively produce, before the said referee, all such books, deeds, papers, and writings, in their or either of their custody or power, relating to the matters in difference, as the said referee shall think fit to require.

And it is, by the like consent, further ordered that if either of the said parties shall, by affected delay or otherwise, wilfully prevent the said referee from making his certificate, or shall not attend after reasonable notice, and without such excuse as the said referee shall be satisfied with and adjudge to be reasonable, then the said referee may proceed ex parte, and the party occasioning the delay shall pay to the other such costs as the court of quarter sessions of the peace, for this city and liberty, shall consider to be reasonable and just.

Clerks' Hall, Wood-street, December, 1830.

To the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor, or Vestry Clerks.

Whereas by an act of parliament passed in the second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for the keeping regular, uniform, and annual registers of all parish poor infants under a certain age within the bills of mortality;" and also by another act, passed in the seventh year of his late Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the better regulation of the parish poor children of the several parishes therein mentioned, within the bills of mortality," it is enacted, That the respective churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parishes shall keep a register book ruled and headed on each page, agreeable to the schedules annexed to the said acts, of all infants under their care, from their birth or time of admission into the workhouses or parish houses, until apprenticed out or otherwise discharged; and that, at the expiration of each year, the names of all such children as are then remaining under their care shall be transferred to the register of the next year, under their proper dates and description in which they stand in the preceding register, previous to any further entry; so that the register of each year shall contain a full and distinct account of the whole number of parish poor children under their care in the course of the year, without being intermixed with the deaths or discharges of any of the preceding years. And also, that exact copies of such registers, ending the thirty-first of December in every year, shall be transmitted to the master and wardens of the company of parish clerks, on or before the fifteenth day of February following.

87. Notice requiring churchwardens, &c. in London, to return lists of poor children, &c.

In order that such registers and copies of registers may be correctly made, the master, wardens, and court of assistants have directed that proper forms be printed agreeable to the schedules of the said acts, and sold only at their hall, in Wood-street, Cheapside, (a) and that attendance be there given for such purpose, and for receipt of the returns on Tuesday afternoons from three to five o'clock, and on Thursday mornings till one o'clock.

And whereas several parishes have neglected to make their returns within the time limited; and others have made returns not agreeable to the act, which has occasioned much delay in making up the general abstract, notice is hereby given, that the master and wardens of the said company are determined to put the penalties in force against such churchwardens and vestry clerks, who do not in future make their returns correctly by the fifteenth of February, as required by the said acts. The penalty for neglecting is five pounds.

J. F., Clerk.

[N.B. By a late order of a committee of the House of Commons, it is required, that returns of parish apprentices be in future correctly made, agreeable to schedule E. of the before mentioned act of the seventh George the Third.]

House of Commons.

Mercurij, 3^o die Novembris, 1830.

Ordered,

That the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every parish, township, or other place, in England and Wales, do prepare an account, shewing the total amount of money levied for poor rates and county rates, in the year ending on 25th March, 1830, upon such parish, township, or other place maintaining its own poor; and also the total amount of money expended in that year; distinguishing in the said account the amount of money paid for any other purposes than the relief of the poor; and that such churchwardens and overseers do, as soon as may be, transmit such account to the clerk of the House of Commons; stating, in addition to such account, whether any select vestry has been formed, or an assistant overseer appointed, by virtue of the act 59 Geo. III. c. 12; and any other observations which may be thought necessary.

To the Churchwardens or Overseers.

Be pleased to turn over, and write on the two next pages the name of the county and place, and your answer, as required by the above order, and then return this sheet by the post; a direction being printed at the back of it for that purpose.

 * * The totals of the poor rate accounts annually exhibited to the magistrates, within fourteen days after the appointment of the new parish officers, (under the acts 43 Eliz. c. 2; and 40 Geo. III. c. 49,) will enable the present parish officers to answer the above questions.*

B. and C. D., two of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said county of _____ bearing date on the _____ day of _____ instant, for and concerning the removal of _____ his wife and _____ their son, aged _____ from the parish of _____ aforesaid, to the said parish of _____

And the following are the grounds of our appeal:—

Because no notice in writing of the paupers' having been chargeable or relieved by the respondent parish, and no copy of the order or examination upon which the order was made have been sent by the overseers or guardians of the respondent parish to those of the appellant parish (a). Because the pauper ought not to have been removed, as the appellant gave due notice of appeal against the order within twenty-one days after notice in writing of such order and the pauper's chargeability (b). Because the pauper was not chargeable to the respondent parish at the time when the said order was made. Because the pauper did not come to settle in the respondent parish, but met with an accident therein, in his passage through the same, and ought not to have been removed (c). Because the pauper is settled in the respondent parish (d). Because the pauper is settled in the respondent parish by hiring and service. Because the pauper never acquired any settlement in the appellant parish in the manner stated in the examination sent to the appellants (e). Because the pauper acquired a settlement in the parish of A., subsequently to that acquired by him in our parish. Because the pauper was resident on his own estate (f), or occupying a tenement, or living as a yearly servant (g) in the respondent parish, and therefore irremovable. Because the husband of the pauper is not settled in our parish. Because the pauper has been removed from her husband without his consent (h). Because the pauper is the wife of an Irishman and ought to have been sent to Ireland, according to the statute (i). Because the pauper is within the age of nurture, and ought not to have been removed from her mother (k) who is resident in the respondent parish. Because the place to which the pauper has been removed is extra-parochial (l). Because the persons who acted as overseers in obtaining this order were not duly appointed (m). (a) The statement of the grounds of appeal is required by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 81, (ante, 890), and it must be served fourteen days before the sessions, either with the notice or by itself. In general, this statement had better be incorporated in the notice of appeal; but there may be cases where notice is given to prevent an actual removal, and yet it may not be convenient at the same time to specify the grounds; then a separate statement may be made.

Those grounds only should be selected which the appellants can safely rely on, as the court of quarter sessions may order the costs of the unsuccessful objections to be paid by the appellant, although they quash the order on some tenable objection, s. 83. In selecting the objections the appellant should in some degree be guided by the examination on which the removal was made, as the respondent will be confined to that on hearing the appeal.

(b) This is required by the 81st section of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, and is, it seems, a proper ground of appeal, and indeed the only remedy for the omission of it; and as this is a matter of form, it will not prevent a fresh removal to the same parish.

Herefordshire, Easter Sessions, 1830.VII. Forms

Removals.} Saint Peter in the city of Hereford, and } Kington in the county of Hereford.

This was an appeal against an order of two magistrates of the county of Hereford, dated the 1st of March, 1830, for the removal of Charlotte Stephens, single woman, from the parish of Kington in the county of Hereford, to the parish of Saint Peter in the city of Hereford. The order was confirmed, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, on the following case:

146. Case stated for opinion of court of King's Bench (a).

The pauper, Charlotte Stephens [here state the facts of the case]. It was contended by the appellant parish, that the indenture was void for want of the consent of two magistrates, part of the premium having been paid out of the parochial funds, but the Court confirmed the order, considering that the indenture was not a binding by any overseer or overseers, but by Doctor Lye, who was not overseer of either of the parishes. The Court also considered that the payments by the several parishes were voluntary, and not paid under any legal obligation; and though charged to the parish account, no evidence being produced that the pauper belonged to either parish, there was no occasion to have the consent of magistrates, under 56 Geo. III. c. 139, to the binding.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, Whether the indenture was valid without the consent of the magistrates? If it was not so, the pauper is improperly removed to the parish of Saint Peter.

W. B., his wife, and their children, namely, J., aged about years, E., aged about years, and D., aged about months, from the parish of in the county of aforesaid, to the parish of L., in the county of D., stands adjourned to the present quarter sessions. It is now ordered that the said order be and the same is hereby quashed with costs, and also the costs of maintaining the paupers.*

Certificate of taxing the costs.

And we said justices do hereby certify that the appellants are entitled for their costs in this appeal to the sum of pounds, shillings, and pence, and the further sum of pounds, shillings, and pence, for the maintenance of the paupers, making together the sum of pounds, shillings, and pence.

By the Court.

149. The like that the grounds of appeal were frivolous and vexatious and appellant to pay all costs.

N. } To the Constable of D., and to all other constables in the said county to wit. } duly to execute, and T. J., our Special Constable, duly sworn to execute this our warrant.

Whereas it hath this day been duly made to appear unto us, J. W., clerk, and W. R., esquire, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of N., as well upon the oath of W. P., one of the churchwardens of the parish of K. in the said county of N., as otherwise, that upon a certain appeal against our order for the removal of W. M. and H. his wife, and W. their child, from the parish of D. in the said county of N., to the said parish of K. in the said county—the court of quarter sessions for the county aforesaid, by the order dated the seventh day of January now last past, did amongst other things order that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of D., should, upon notice to them, or any of them, given of the said order, pay to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of K., or to some one of them, the sum of pounds for their just and reasonable costs and charges upon the determination of the said appeal by the said court. And that the said sum of pounds so ordered to be paid as aforesaid, was on the day of instant, duly demanded of and from E. L., esquire, and R. B., esquire, the overseers of the poor of the said parish of D., by the said W. P., and that the said order was at the same time shown to the said E. L. and R. B., who respectively looked at the same, but they did not, nor did either of them, then or at any time since pay the said sum of pounds, or any part thereof, to the said W. P., but therein hath made default; whereby and by virtue of the said statute in such case made and provided, the said sum of pounds may be levied of the said goods and chattels of the said E. L. and R. B., as overseers of the parish of D. aforesaid. These are, therefore, to command you to make distress of the goods and chattels of the said E. L. and R. B., and if within the space of eight days next after the making of such distress the said sums, together with the reasonable charges of taking and keeping the said distress, shall not be paid, that then you do sell the said goods and chattels so by you distrained, and out of the monies arising by such sale you do pay the sum of pounds to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of K. aforesaid, or to one of them, rendering the overplus, if any, on demand, unto the said E. L. or R. B., the reasonable charges of making and keeping and selling the said distress being first deducted; and if no such distress can be made, that then you certify the same unto us, to the end that such further proceedings may be had therein as to the law doth appertain.

 Indenture to serve one master four and another three years, in two trades, requires only one stamp, id.
 Stamp for apprenticeship to serve at sea, 505

8. Imperfect Apprenticeships, 506.
 What is a hiring, and not an imperfect apprenticeship, 393. See also HIRING AND SERVICE.
 An imperfect apprenticeship cannot enure as a hiring, 506
 As where no indenture, or indenture not executed or unstamped, 506
 Or is incomplete, for fraudulent reasons, 507
 The intention to create apprenticeship, may be inferred though the word "apprentice" not used, 507, 508 Inferred from a premium being given, 507, n.
 Though it may be inferred where no premium is given, 509

No technical words necessary to create this relation, 509

Covenant for secrecy evidence of apprenticeship, 514

It is enough if the purport of the contract be that one should teach and the other learn a trade, 509

Though the scholar does not contract to learn, id.

If the contract be not reciprocal, no settlement will be gained, id.

An agreement to learn to weave flannels is, though he was to have half his earnings, 510

So also to learn the trade of a tailor, master refusing to take an apprentice, 512

So also when he was to be taught the art of weaving, 513

A pauper "hired" by uncle "to learn his trade," to do any other work—indentures prepared but not executed—an imperfect apprenticeship, 513

So also where pauper agreed to serve as "an articulated servant, to do any work, and be an out apprentice," 515

So also where father gave a guinea to have his son taught a trade—master treated and spoke of him as an apprentice, id.

So also where mother accepted the offer to teach her son a trade and no deed executed, because of mother's poverty, 516

9. Of Parish Apprenticeships.

The Statutes, 475

Majority of churchwardens and overseers may bind, 517

Even where guardians appointed, 31, see 458

Power given by 43 Eliz., 452

Indenture signed by one churchwarden only and one overseer, before 51 Geo. III. c. 8, rendered valid, 472, 517, 519

This extends to parishes where there are three officers only, one of whom acts in both characters, 517

Indenture executed by one churchwarden and one overseer may be sufficient, 518

Indentures rendered valid, though the churchwarden had not been sworn into office, 473

Indentures executed before 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 32, by one churchwarden, where two formerly appointed, are valid, 479

If a majority of the whole body execute, execution by a churchwarden unnecessary, 518. See CERTIFICATE.

By a majority of overseers of a township, and no churchwarden, is sufficient, 518

A defective parish apprenticeship may be good as a binding by the parties, 520

The parish may bind a child not resident in the parish, 491

A parish indenture within the first ten sections of 56 Geo. III. must be signed, but need not be sealed, by two justices, 519, 521

It is a judicial act, and justices must be together when they sign, 519

Or if one justice signs alone, he must be present when the other signs, id.

If they act when separate, no settlement is gained under it, id.

Commissioners may issue rules, and justices must certify a compliance with them, 484

Where any expense is incurred by the parish, and the parish officers are not parties, the justices must seal as well as sign, 521, 527

Secus, when the person bound is of age, 522

Payment by the overseers is prima facie out of parish funds, 521

Private charity, though vested in the overseers, is not a parochial fund, 523

Supply of clothes by overseers where the charity binds, does not render a seal necessary, 525

11th section of 56 Geo. III. applies only where the overseers directly or indirectly procure the indenture, 525, 526

Omission of seal renders indenture void, 527

And no settlement can be gained under it, id.

As to corporate seal, 483

No settlement where order for binding not referred to in indenture by the date, 528

Notices will be presumed, 529

If the justices who sign the allowance have no jurisdiction in the place where the master lives, notice of the intended binding must be given to the overseers of that place before allowance, id.

Notice also must be given where the binding is from one parish to another, 530

Justices of the county allowed a binding to a master resident in an exclusive jurisdiction within the county, the indenture is void for want of notice, 529

Where the binding is into another county, four justices must sign it, 520

Remedied by statute, 483

Justices "of county aforesaid" sufficient, if those words can apply to one county only, 532

No child can be bound a parish apprentice till he is nine years old, 477, 485

Nor beyond twenty-one, 452

10. Enrolment of Indenture of Apprentices to sea-faring Persons.

No person deemed an apprentice to the master of a ship or fisherman till the indenture is enrolled, 532

Where an indenture was not enrolled according to 5 Eliz., service under it gave settlement, id.

11. Service and Residence, 533

Apprentice may gain a settlement by binding and inhabitation, 452

Secus if the binding (not by the parish) is without the intervention of the pauper, 489

The settlement is where he inhabits, (See 3 W. & M. c. 11, 475), not where he serves, 533

APPRENTICESHIP—*continued.*11. Service and Residence—continued.

As an apprentice for the last forty days, 533
See as to certificates, 812

The forty days' residence required by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, 451

Residence for forty days in A. and then forty days in B. and then one day in A. the settlement is in A. 534

Forty successive days not required, id.

Nor within the compass of one year, id.

Master's residence and settlement are immaterial, 533

The inhabitation must be in the character of an apprentice, 534

Residence with a relative on account of illness, with consent of master, gives no settlement, id.

Secus, where apprentice became a cripple, returned to his master, and was by him placed with the mother in the same parish, 535, 536

Or where put by his master, and at his expense, in the workhouse, 535

Or where residing in one parish on account of illness, he does some work for his master in another, 537, 541

Performance of actual service is not material, 536

Inhabitation by indulgence is not sufficient, 539

Where apprentice went home on Saturdays, and absconded on the Monday, the service ceased on the Saturday, 538, 539, 540

Where the master and apprentice worked in one parish, and both returned to master's house on Saturdays and Sundays in another parish, this last residence is under the indentures, 539

Residence by apprentice with his master, both being on duty in the militia, sufficient, 542

Returning to school, and not at master's expense, is not sufficient, 544

Apprentice sleeping on board of a ship lying within a parish, and in the course of trade, gains a settlement there, 542

So also where ship laid up in winter, and apprentice resided with his parents, without working for his master, who paid a compensation, 544

No settlement can be acquired by an apprentice in the sea service, nor to a fisherman. (4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 67). . . 980

Sleeping in master's parish without his knowledge is not sufficient, 544

But if with the knowledge of a second master it is sufficient, 545

12. Service with different Masters.

Modern rule, "an express consent of the first master, and an employment by the latter in the capacity of apprentice," 546

The necessity of the privity of the second master to the permission by the first, has been denied, 546

Several previous cases inconsistent with this principle, id.

The Assent must be express.

As by a recommendation, 547

Mere knowledge does not imply consent, id.
Permission to work where apprentice pleased is not sufficient, 549, 550, 560

Though his master knows where he works, 549, 556

And though he occasionally worked for his master, and regularly paid his master 2s. a week, 548

"You may go to S." sufficient assent, id.

Consent may be given after the apprentice has entered the second service, id.

Giving a character is an assent, 549

Consent given by delivery of indenture, 560

By providing a loom, 561

Where the second told the first master he had got the pauper, and the first master said "I am glad of it," the assent is not sufficient, 550, 556

It must be given before the indentures are given up, 548, 559

Service with the partner of his master, after his master's death, is not sufficient, 550

Consent, by whom to be given.

A widow without letters of administration may consent, 551, 552.

So also an executor, 551

Without probate, 552

So also the second master, 552, 553

By the appointee under 32 Geo. III. c. 57, 571

The Consent may be given by Parol or Assignment of Indenture, 553

Justices have power to assign by indorsement on indenture, 465

An invalid assignment of indenture is evidence of consent, 553

Any assignment or putting away of parish apprentice since 56 Geo. III. c. 139, must be by consent of justices, or no settlement can be gained, 478

Stamp required for assignment where required on original indenture, 474

Under 20l. no stamp required, 554

The second Master may be privy to the Consent.

Particular consent insufficient, if the apprentice is hired as a servant, and the second master is ignorant of the apprenticeship, 555

The Apprentice must be employed as such, and under the Original Indenture.

If the apprentice is hired, the service is not referable to the indenture, but to the hiring, 556

Where a second indenture is executed after express consent, the service is not referable to the original indenture, 557, 558, 564

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship, 559

The justices have power to discharge an apprentice, if the master cannot employ or maintain him, 466

APPRENTICESHIP—*continued.*13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship—continued.

Confined to cases where the premium did not exceed 5*l.*, 466

A relation created by deed cannot be discharged by parol, 539

Bankruptcy of the master was no discharge of the indenture till 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, 483, 562

Exchanging indentures is a virtual cancelling, 569, 570

They are not vacated by being given up but not cancelled, 560, 565, 566

Agreement to discharge indenture on certain payments does not vacate indenture till money paid, 548, 562

Nor even then, so as to make the settlement in the parish where the apprentice lodged the night before the payment, 540

If money is paid, the indentures are discharged from the time of payment, though not given up, 563, 570

The apprenticeship continues where master tells apprentice to shift for himself, and if he cannot to return to him, 564

Consent to give up the apprentice, but indentures not given up, is not sufficient, 566

Yearly payments made by apprentice to his master prove that the indentures continue, 561

Entering the king's service with master's consent, does not vacate, 565

Infant cannot consent to discharge, 567, 568

Unless it is manifestly for his benefit, as where his master ran away, 567

An infant bound by his father may be discharged by consent of all parties, 569

Parish apprentice of full age, and bound till twenty-four, may be discharged without consent of parish officers, 568, 569

Contra, 563

Apprenticeship is a personal trust, and determines by death of either party, 571

But a parish apprentice continues till three months after the death of master, if the apprentice is then living with the family, 464, 571

And in certain cases the justices have power to order such apprentice to serve the residue of his term, 463

Form, 468

Justice may discharge parish apprentice when the master cannot employ him, 463

14. Evidence.

Secondary evidence of lost indenture, admissible, 572

Parish register the best secondary evidence of parish indentures, 470, 572

And of assignments, 470

Parish chest proper depository of parish indentures, 576

Indenture executed thirty years ago, presumed to have been stamped, though no entry in stamp office, 572

Parol evidence inadmissible, till both parts of indenture proved to have been lost, 573

What is or is not sufficient evidence thereof, 573, 575, 577, 578

The person into whose hands it has been traced, must be called, 573, 578

Declaration of the master, that he delivered it to the overseers, is not sufficient, master being alive, 573

Declaration of pauper, not living, that he burnt it, and of master's executrix that she could not find it, without search among papers, is sufficient evidence, 575

Declaration of deceased apprentice, respecting the loss, inadmissible, indenture not having been in his possession, 574

Execution must be proved by party calling for it, though it comes from the adverse party, 576

Character of, after twenty years, presumed from being treated as such, all papers having been burnt, 577

Assignment by indorsement, inadmissible unless stamped, 578

Recital of premium by law, out of charitable fund, no evidence, if payment of premium proved aliunde, 579.

Parol evidence inadmissible till the existence and essential preliminaries are proved, 576

ARREST.

Residence under, in the parish in which tenement lies, sufficient, 673; but see 583

For bastardy, does not dissolve a contract of hiring, 419

ASSIGNMENT. See APPRENTICE (12.)

A person is not strictly assignable, 553

But it may be evidence of master's consent to apprentice serving assignee, id.

Of parish apprentice, must be with consent of justices, 465

Form of, 468

It must be stamped, if the original indenture require it, 466

1. Statutes relating to, 773—776

Persons removing into a parish with a certificate were not removable till actually chargeable before 35 Geo. III. 774

It is an acknowledgment of a person as a parishioner, id.

It is in the nature of a power, 782

Cannot gain a settlement in the certified parish except by taking a lease at 10*l.* 774

Or execute an annual office after a legal appointment, id.

Neither the servant nor apprentice to the certificated person can gain a settlement in that parish, id.

The certificate to be under the hands and seals of overseers and allowed by two justices, id.

2. Form of, and Allowance.

Acknowledging pauper as inhabitant, without saying legally settled, sufficient, 775, n.

3. Direction of.

Need not be directed to the parish, 776

To parish of A. and any other parish in the city and county, sufficient, id.

A particular parish must be in contemplation, id.

4. Of the Signature and Seals.

It must be signed and sealed by the majority of churchwardens and overseers, 776

If not, it is void, id.

A majority is sufficient, 781

One overseer only appointed, signature by him is void, 776, 777

So also by two churchwardens, one of whom was sole overseer, 776. But see 51 Geo. III. c. 80, s. 1. 775

A certificate, sixty-three years old, signed by one churchwarden and one overseer, presumed to be good, 777

After seventy years, and recognition of the certificate by the parish, it may be presumed that a churchwarden was sworn in before he executed it, 781

But where five officers were appointed and two signed no facts presumed to render it valid, 783

There must be distinct seals for each signature, 780

Persons described as officers of the parish may be shown to be officers of a hamlet, 784

As to validity of certificates signed by defective number of parish officers, see APPRENTICE, (9.)

CERTIFICATE—continued.

5. Of Allowance and Attestation.

It must be allowed and subscribed by two justices, 785

Otherwise it is null, id.

Justices are not bound to allow it, id.

If the parish is in two counties, by the justices of either, id.

It must be attested by two witnesses before allowance, id.

Where an order stated that a certificate was duly allowed, attestation will be presumed, id.

The justices may be the witnesses, id.

The attestation may be proved before the allowing justices by persons who saw witness sign, id.

6. Proof of Certificate.

A certificate allowed and execution certified by the justices is admissible without further proof, 786

The production of a certificate thirty years old is sufficient, without giving any account of it, 787

If any account required the overseer who produces it may be examined for that purpose, 786

But an entry made by a parish officer in an old book of having received a certificate is not evidence for them, id.

Connected with an order for granting it, it may be, 786, 787.

7. Of the Delivery.

A certificate of the master must be delivered to the parish to prevent his apprentice gaining a settlement, 787

So also a certificate given by a friendly society, id.

Delivery will not be presumed, id.

8. Persons protected by.

A person who resides in a poor house, situate without, but belonging to the certificated parish, 787

9. To whom it extends.

"Family," includes unborn child, 788

"Family," restrained to those who constitute part of the existing household, 789

"Wife and family," semble, includes second wife, 788

"A. C., spinster, and the child she goeth with," comprehends the child, though a bastard, id.

Secus, "all the children she might have," id. Children who have become heads of families are not included, id.

Grandchildren are included only when the parent is named in the certificate, 789

It extends to those only who come to reside, and actually reside under it, 790

An emancipated son ceases to be part of "the family" under the certificate, 790, 803

A child named in the certificate follows his father's settlement, for he does not inhabit suo jure, but as part of the family, 792

9. To whom it extends—continued.

If two children are mentioned by name, an elder child is not included, 794

A certificate of friendly society to the father will include an unemancipated daughter, 789

10. Effect of.

It is evidence as an admission although not delivered, 787, 795

It is not evidence, even as an admission, unless properly signed, 795

It is conclusive only between the original parties, 796

It is a kind of estoppel and not to be favoured, id.

The certifying parish may inquire into the truth of the certificate in a question with a third parish, id.

As between the original parishes the parish granting a certificate of persons as man and wife cannot deny the marriage, 795

Though the man had a wife living, id.

Or the husband a wife, id.

And if it certifies a child it cannot deny its legitimacy, id.

It is not conclusive against subsequent settlement, 797

It extends no farther than the parish to which it is first delivered, id.

A certificated person, or his apprentice, may gain any kind of settlement in a third parish, id.

11. *Abandonment of.*1. By any Settlement in a Third Parish, 798

The onus probandi of a fresh settlement lies on the certifying parish, 798

It is discharged by certificated person being hired and serving for a year in third parish, id.

A certificated person gaining a fresh settlement in a third parish might afterwards acquire one in the certifying parish by hiring and service, id.

2. By Settlement in the Certified Parish.

By taking a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, 798

The certificated person coming into a parish on a tenement of the value of 10*l.* never resides under the certificate, 601

Residence by permission is not sufficient, 799

Tenement under 13 & 14 Car. II. is a tenement under this statute, 621, 798

Taking before certificate and completing residence after gives settlement, id.

By appointment to execute annual office, 799. See OFFICE.

By estate, id. See that title.

If A. had taken any interest, it would have passed to his assignees, as he was a bankrupt, id.

Devise to A. with liberty for B. to live there, residence by B. gives a settlement, 698

So also residence by an appointed schoolmaster on estates held in trust for the school, 698. And see, 683

The rent must be appropriated to the master, and not to the school, 699

Residence by a child on an estate devised to be let, and profits to be paid to her, gives a settlement, id.

Neither a legal or equitable estate is essential, 700

An equitable right is not sufficient, 705, n.

Residence by a freeholder after an agreement to sell is sufficient, 715. See 713, and 715 n.

Devisee of a copyhold before admittance has a sufficient estate, 700

Estate in Remainder or Reversion.

A remainder man during the tenancy for life, hath not a sufficient estate, 701, 702

Neither has a reversioner, 702

The interest must be present, id.

Residence by the reversioner by leave of lessee to superintend repairs is sufficient, 701. See 712

Widow's Right of Dower.

A widow having a right to reside for forty days upon her husband's estate after his death, thereby gains a settlement, 703

But if the estate is mortgaged, she can gain no settlement till dower is assigned, id.

Nor till dower is assigned can her second husband, by residence with her, gain one, id.

By Wife's Estate in Trust.

Residence by husband on estate settled to the separate use of wife, gives him a settlement, 704

So also by the husband of an administratrix of the trust of a term, 705

So also by the husband of one who before marriage had made a purchase under 30*l.* 705

ESTATE, Settlement by—*continued.*I. Estates not by Purchase—continued.By Wife's Estate in Trust—continued.

So also by the husband of the executrix of a yearly tenant, 705

So also since 59 Geo. III... 706

The sessions should find whether a widow of a yearly tenant, who married again, paid rent as his representative, or became the tenant, 706

But residence on an estate which the wife had never reduced into possession, is not sufficient, 708

Her heir is entitled to it, id.

Guardian by Ward's Estate.

Guardian in socage residing on ward's estate, gains a settlement, 708

If the ward is under fourteen years of age, 710

So also a mother as guardian of copyhold estate, there being no custom, 710

There can be no guardian in socage of an equitable estate, id.

But a natural guardian has no interest in the land, id.

Estate in Mortgage.

Mortgagor or mortgagee in possession, may acquire a settlement, 711

Residence by mortgagor to superintend repairs, is not sufficient, 712. See 701

Residence on estate after conveyance to trustees for sale, gives a settlement, 712. Contra, 711

After a contract to sell, is sufficient, 715

Residence by mortgagee after an agreement to sell his interest is insufficient, 713

So by mortgagor after agreeing to sell his equity of redemption, 715, n.

Husband purchased an estate and conveyed it to trustees to pay purchase-money, with remainder to the sole use of his wife. He resided on it afterwards, but gained no settlement, 714

Settlement gained by marriage, with mortgagee in possession, 712

By Estate acquired by Possession.

Peaceable possession for twenty years is a sufficient estate, 716

Although not altogether adverse, 716

Strict title not required as an ejectment, 717

Possession for eighteen years has been considered sufficient, 717

But it seems nothing less than twenty years' adverse possession by tenant at will, will do, id.

Undisturbed residence by son of mortgagee, upon a claim of right, on an estate mortgaged to the parish by the father, is sufficient, 718

Title to waste by twenty years' possession is not defeated by parochial perambulation, 719

There is no adverse possession, when

II. Of Estates by Purchase for Pecuniary Considerations, 7211. What is a Purchase.

If a father gains no settlement by purchase, neither does a son by residence with him, 721

"Purchase" confined to cases where the consideration is pecuniary, 722

A conveyance from father to daughter for natural affection, is not a purchase, id.

Nor where the consideration was natural affection and 10*l.*, the value exceeding 10*l.*, id. But see 575

But a grant of waste with nominal fine heriot, and quit rent, is a purchase, 723

Grant of licence to inclose, does not pass any interest in the land, 724, 725

Nor the vendee for 30*l.* of the grantee of such licence, 725

A purchaser under 30*l.* is not removable, id.

Grant of copyhold without custom is not sufficient, 724

2. Of the consideration paid.

The sum of 30*l.* must be bonâ fide paid, 721, 726

The parish officers may prove that nothing was paid, 727

Proof of a sum paid greater than the consideration rented, is good, 726

Part payment by parish officers sufficient, 729

Expenses of a surrender of copyhold form no part of the "sum paid," 728

Secus, the fine to the lord, 728

Where money was borrowed on mortgage of the premises, and paid to vendee, it is sufficient, 729

Secus, if the consideration money is not paid, but remains upon the security of the premises, 730

A purchase of premises, previously mortgaged and not paid off, for less than 30*l.* is not sufficient, 731

Mortgagee entering as creditor for more than 30*l.* gains a settlement, 732

3. Money laid out after Purchase.

Money laid out in the erection of a shop after purchase, cannot be reckoned, 732

4. Equitable Interest in Purchased Lands.

Possession given after payment of one instalment, second was not paid, and contract rescinded, this is not an equitable interest as to give settlement, 733

Payment of deposit does not give an equitable estate, 734

An agreement by a father to advance money to his son to buy house, and the father to occupy it for his life, gives the father no estate, 735

The relation of trustee and cestui que trust must be created, 736

Equitable right only is not sufficient, 733

It must be an equitable estate, id.

Payment of the residue of purchase-money, after pauper had sold the estate, does not relate back to the commencement of his possession, 736

Where no contract is executed, payment of the whole of the consideration gives an equitable estate, id.

An equitable estate may be acquired by a bond from the legal owner, 735

Of the Residence, 736

Residence within ten miles necessary for retaining the settlement acquired by estate, id.

Forty days' residence is necessary, 737

And after the interest is complete, id.

In the parish, it need not be on the estate, 736

The forty days need not be successive, 737

Residence by leave of tenant for the purpose of making repairs, is sufficient, 701. See 712.

ESTOPPEL.

Parish officers are not estopped from proving that no money was paid for an estate, 727

Certificate is not, except between certifying and certified parishes, 684

Parish may be estopped from objecting to an appeal by a hamlet, though the order is to the parish, 881

EVIDENCE.

On removal of wife, evidence of her maiden settlement is a prima facie case, 316, 317

But is rebutted by proof that the husband has a settlement though the place is uncertain, 317, 318. See different heads of settlement.

2. The Contract itself.

It must be a contract for service, 346

Hiring of a turnkey to a gaol is not, 343

Contract for cohabitation insufficient, 346

The pauper himself must contract, 343

A son, by serving, may adopt contract made by father, 345, n.

A hiring out by the overseers is not a lawful hiring, 343

If the pauper hires himself, and overseers assist him with clothes to complete the contract, it is a good hiring, 344

It may be made in an extra-parochial place, 345

And on a Sunday, id.

If the contract is by deed, execution by servant not essential, 343

There must be a contract to hire and serve for a year, mutually binding, 346

Employment out of charity is no hiring, 346, 347

Secus, where first contract an imperfect apprenticeship, 510. See 395.

Hiring presumed at the end of first year, 350

Where the parties are not related, from a continuance in service, a hiring on the same terms may fairly be presumed, 352

If the relation of father and child subsist, that presumption fails, id.

The presumption may be rebutted by the custom of the country, 353

Contract for service by a father not inferred, if father had no occupation for a hired servant, 341

The sessions must find the fact of hiring, 357

And King's Bench will confirm it, if any premise to warrant it, id.

Hiring for a year inferred from service from day before New-year's day to two days after Christmas, 353, n.

4. Where Contract indefinite, 353*General Rule.*

An indefinite hiring, where neither time nor wages are mentioned, is a hiring for a year, 353, 354

Apprehension of parties cannot vary the legal effect, 354, 380

Though their acts may explain it, 514, 515

Where there is a customary period of hiring, a hiring for that period may be presumed, 353

Hiring "to go into the place of another," who was yearly servant, 353

"To serve in the stable," 354

To come and take care of a child, 355

"To stay on an end in your place," id.

Are general hirings, id.

Hiring for eleven months, and then one month "on the same terms," is a general hiring, 357

Nor from statute fair to statute fair, when interval less than a year, 362

Nor for fifty-two weeks, id.

Nor from there days after Michaelmas to Michaelmas following, in leap year, though the interval is 365 days, 363

Three successive hirings, from a few days after Old Michaelmas to Old Michaelmas, is not, 356

In leap year there must be 366 days, 363
Sessions ought to decide whether hiring for the year means the current year, 431

6. Wages and Notice.

Where no time is specified, and wages are reserved weekly, it is a weekly hiring, 363, 364, 367

But if there is proof that the hiring was intended for a year, the reservation of weekly wages will not control it, 363, 364

Contract for weekly wages, summer and winter, is a weekly hiring, 364, 368

Weekly wages, and an increase at harvest, is not a yearly hiring, 366

Nor where servant asked yearly, and master offered weekly wages, which were accepted, 367

Where wages are weekly, to part on week's notice, 368

Or wages monthly, to part on month's notice, the hiring is not for a year, id.

But hiring at weekly wages, and a month's notice, is a general hiring, 369, 370

So also at weekly wages the year round, and a fortnight's notice, 369

So also at 2s. a day, there being a custom to give a fortnight's notice, id. n.

7. Hiring by the Job.

Hiring for a year to spin so much per stone, 371

Or to make screws per gross, good earn good hire, is sufficient, id.

But a hiring to make a certain number of bricks is not, id.

Nor a general hiring to work by the piece, 372

8. Retrospective Hiring.

The contract must be prospective, and not include time past, 372

HIRING and Service—*continued.*I. THE HIRING—*continued.*9. Hirings to avoid Settlement.

The hiring may be for less than a year with the express purpose of preventing settlement, 362, 373

But if the contract is really for a year, but ostensibly and colourably for a shorter time, a settlement will be gained, 373

Hiring for eleven months to prevent, settlement, is valid, id.

But hiring for eleven months, and to give one month over, is colourable, and in law a hiring for a year, id.

A covenant not to hire servants so as to let them gain settlements, is valid, id.

10. Conditional Hiring.

Is where there is a contract for a year, and, on a given event, either party may put an end to it, 374

If the condition is not acted on, the contract becomes absolute, id.

A hiring to work, with power for the master to stop the work, is conditional, id.

A hiring, with liberty to part at a month's wages, or month's notice, is conditional, 380

So also a hiring with power of dismissal without notice, id.

So also a hiring for quarter of a year, and if they liked each other to continue for a year, id.

So also a hiring, the servant to try if he was strong enough for the work, id.

Where settlement complete before condition acted on, 405

11. Exceptive Hiring, 381

An exception made after the hiring is complete, does not affect it, 416

Is one where the relation cannot subsist for the year, unless some further arrangement should be made, 374

So also, if by the bargain days or hours are excluded from the service, id.

It is exceptive where servant reserves liberty of absence at sheep-shearing, 381

For the harvest month, id.

A week every year to visit friends, id.

Or two or three days, id.

Or two days to receive a pension, 382

Distinction between dispensation and exception, is where the absence forms a part of the original contract, or where it be by permission of master, 382

Reserving liberty of absence at sheep-shearing, during which servant to find a man at his own expense, and his wages to go on, is exceptive, id.

So where servant agrees to make up the absent time at the year's end, 383

So where servant was to have the harvest month, if he and his master could not agree, and they did agree, id.

I. THE HIRING—continued.

11. Exceptive Hiring—continued.

So also where servant to be paid for overwork, and receive no wages in severe weather, during which he might employ himself in any way, 383

So also where the agreement was for working days only, to do certain quantities on each day, and have the rest of time, 384

So also a hiring as long as master had work, and when none, servant not to be paid, 385

But where a daughter is hired to do the office of a servant, a permission to earn what she can besides, is not an exception, id.

Stipulation for absence made before earnest given, is an exception, 416

Stipulation for absence in militia, not an exception, 386

Exceptions implied by general use or custom, will not affect the contract, 387, 391

But if such exceptions are part of the contract, they will, 389

12. Hiring with Limitation of Working Hours.

Hiring to work for certain hours only, is exceptive, 387, 389

As a hiring to work shearmen's hours only, 388

Secus hiring to work as bleacher, 369

Hiring to work twelve hours and do as much overwork as servant pleased, an exception, 388, 390

But to work twelve hours-day, and if more, a certain sum per hour, is not, 391

Nor a hiring for two years, with fixed working hours, and to be paid for overtime, and deductions made for deficiency, 376

Nor where there was a penalty for absence, 378

A person hired as clerk in a mercantile house is hired generally, though he serves only the hours of business, 392

A hiring to work according to the rules of the factory which were discretionary with the master, is general, 392

13. Imperfect Apprenticeship.

Not a good hiring, 393

It must be a hiring for service, and not an imperfect apprenticeship, 393. See APPRENTICESHIP, IMPERFECT.

A verbal agreement to serve, and the master to teach a trade, is a hiring, 393

So also clubbing for three years to be taught a trade and do any work, 394

So also where the pauper contracted in writing to serve for three years, to learn to make hats, and there was no agreement by master to teach, 394

Contract of hiring not superseded by imperfect apprenticeship, 395

I. THE HIRING—continued.

13. Imperfect Apprenticeship—continued.

Allowance in wages for instruction consistent with contract of hiring, 397

Agreement to work for two years, to have earnings, and to allow master for instruction, and use of frame, is a hiring, 396

II. SERVICE.

The servant shall abide in the same service for one year, 397

Service for 365 days is sufficient, though it is less than the year for which servant hired, 358

1. Of Connecting Services under distinct Hirings.

Service under a hiring, for a period less than a year, may be connected with service, however short, under a yearly hiring, 398, 400

And the settlement will be in the place of last agreement, 402

Dissimilar services may connect, 399

Service under void contract will connect, 401

Or under a contract which the parties abandon, 406

So under a conditional contract, id.

The whole year's service must be under a contract creating the relation of master and servant, 401, 516

Part of the year's service may be abroad, 404

A settlement can be gained in such parish only as the servant has the character of one hired for a year, 402

Service under hiring for a year, will connect with service under an agreement, in the middle of the year to work by the piece, 407

No service sufficient under hiring made when pauper was married, id.

2. Of Lapse between Connected Services.

If the service is discontinued for a day, it cannot be coupled with subsequent service, 408, 409

Two days after the year, the pauper made a new agreement, but never left the service, this is no discontinuance, 408

Nor where the first ends and second begins on same day, but pauper leaves only for part of day, 409

3. Of Dispensation.

A dispensation is where the service is constructive, as where the relation of master and servant continues, but the master dispenses with actual service, 410

Idea of dispensation not to be carried farther. It has been stretched as far as ingenuity can go, 410, 437

Receiving absentee without leave, amounts to dispensation, 410

Whether the absence is in the beginning, 411, 418

Middle, 411

Or end of year, 412, 418

Although wages are deducted, 412, 413

So also where absence is from illness, 410, 412

Or reasonable cause, 410

Where the master refused to take the servant, who did not come, from illness, on the day agreed, the service commences from the actual service, 422

So also where master, on summons, paid servant his wages, but refused to take him back. The servant offered to return, and made no other contract, 411

Length of absence immaterial, if master takes him back, although he deducts wages, 412

Going to hospital, and receiving all her wages, is a dispensation, though servant never returned, id.

So also where the accident, which occasions absence, arises from servant being in liquor, and master refuses to take him back, 413

So also where a bankrupt master discharges servant, paying the whole wages, 413

So also where the dismissal is wrongful, full wages paid and accepted by servant, 414

And his clothes taken away, id.

So also where keeper of gaming-house quitted his house, dismissed servants, and paid them full wages, 415

Turning away servant to prevent settlement is a dispensation, id.

Where the absence takes place at the request and on the account of the master, the courts incline to infer dispensation, 417

A week after the hiring the mistress said, "No time was mentioned, you are hired for fifty-one weeks," this is a dispensation, 416, 417

So also where a servant desired to be discharged "to go to see her friends," 417

So also absence with leave, and payment of wages earned to master, 418

So also where servant, in his absence, provided and paid a substitute, 419

So also where servant works for others, and returns to his master, id.

So also where servant imprisoned, on complaint of his master, and returned to the service, id.

So also where a servant was fined for a malicious trespass, and advised by her mistress to go to prison, 420

So also where the year expired before the confinement, and pauper returned only for his clothes, 421

4. Of Change of Master.

Living with another, at master's command, is a service to the first master, 423

HIRING and Service—continued.II. SERVICE—continued.4. Of Change of Master—continued.

So also where master let his farm and pauper continued with the tenant without a new contract, 418, 423

So also where servant continued with master's executor, 414, 423

5. Dissolution.

A dissolution must be by mutual consent, or by act of law, 423

Parting by consent three weeks before the end of the year, with abatement of wages, is a dissolution, 424

So also without abatement of wages, id.

Although he returns to the service, id.

Or bound by a covenant to serve a whole year, id.

So also where servant quitted, on complaint made by former master, from whom, during the same year, he ran away, id.

So also leaving at mistress's request, because another servant coming, 425

Though illness would not enable one party to dissolve the contract, it might induce both to agree to it, id.

So also when servant was ill, and sent for his wages, and part was deducted, 426

Or all paid, id.

Deduction of wages imports master's dissent to the departure, 425

If the master has not the power of compelling the continuance of the contract, it is a dissolution, 428

Or if he could not sue another for harbouring the servant, id.

Servant quitted, after a month's warning, a week before the end of the year; the mistress said, the week did not signify,—this is a dissolution, 427

A hiring may be dissolved on the same day it is made, by a new agreement, 428

Assent of servant to new contract proved by acceptance of earnest, id.

Leave to go into another service with receipt of full wages, is a dissolution, 429

A hiring during the year to commence immediately, at different wages, is a dissolution of the first hiring, id.

But change of wages does not necessarily import a dissolution, 431

Master, quitting business, told pauper to go where he liked, and paid him whole year's wages. Pauper hired himself again. This is a dissolution, 432

So also where servant was discharged at his own request, and procuring substitute, and he hiring himself to another, 433

So also where master turns servant away, and servant accepts the wages, though he returns at master's request, 434

So also where servant absent to get a place, and on his return master refuses to let him stay out the year, and wages to that time paid and accepted, 434

So also settling wages the day before the year ended, the servant requesting to go altogether on that day, 435

So also where servant turned out of doors refuses to return, though master requested it, and receives full wages, id.

Where servant leaves for ill treatment and receives full wages it is a dissolution, though the departure is against the master's will, 436

Consent of servant to dissolution by accepting wages and offering herself as a servant, or taking another place, 437

Discharge by justice a dissolution, 439

The contract may be dissolved by a discharge for pregnancy, id. 837

Mere apprehension for bastardy is not a dissolution, where master received him back, 440

A fraudulent dissolution will not be inferred by King's Bench, 441

III. PLACE IN WHICH SERVANT GAINS SETTLEMENT.

There must be a residence for forty days in the parish to enable a servant to gain a settlement there, 441

They need not be continuous, id.

But must be within the compass of one year, id.

Though not under the same hiring, 442

Nor within a year from the yearly hiring, 443

If the service of the last forty days has been in different parishes, the settlement is where the servant lodges the last night, id. 444

So also in the last parish, where the latter part of service is abroad, 404

Although a forty days' service elsewhere intervene, 444

What considered as place of rest, 451

Some part of the forty days' service must be under a yearly hiring, 402

But not the whole, 398, 390

The master's settlement, 444

And residence is immaterial, id.

So also that the residence is casual, as at a watering place, 445

The service need not be where the hiring was, 447, 448

Service in one parish and residence in another, without master's knowledge, give a settlement in the latter, 448

And although after the servant married, id.

A groom taking race horses from place to place is settled where he resides the last forty days, 444

Residence on account of lunacy gives no settlement, 449

Whether a mine or quarry depends on mode of working, 168

"Saleable Underwoods."

Liable to be rated every year, 169

"Saleable" is in contradistinction to estovers for fuel, &c., id.

Fir planted to shelter oaks, &c. and not for sale, not rateable, id.

Rating under Local Acts.

In Hull, non-resident owners of stock in trade and ships are rateable, 173

In Manchester, waterworks not rateable as a "tenement," 174

Nor the Lord of a market in a public street, 175

In Shrewsbury, gas-pipes are rateable as an "hereditament," id.

Money vested in the stocks is not rateable as "money out at interest," 176

Merely landing timber does not constitute "a wharf," id.

Import of "building" in a paving act, id.

6. Property, where to be rated, 192

Personal property in the parish which the owner inhabits, 104

Real property in the parish where it is situated, id.

Light-house not rateable according to the tolls, where neither the tolls nor the benefit to the ships is received in the parish, 201, 202

Drained marshes, where parish unknown, to adjoining parish, 206

A reservoir is not rateable in one parish for profits made in another, 200

RATE—*continued.*6. Property, where to be rated—continued.

Nor lands, used only to drain other land in another parish, 205

A ship is rateable at her home, the owner being resident there, 116, 204

In Hull, though owner not resident, 173

So also a packet-boat, id.

If no partner resides in the parish where business is transacted the stock is not rateable, 112

If one partner reside, he is rateable for his share only, id.

Canals are rateable in each parish for the profits which the land in each parish yields, 193—195

And not for riverage becoming due in each parish, 194

Bridge situated in two parishes rateable in each, though all the tolls received in one, id.

7. Of the Amount of the Rate, and principle of Valuation, 177. See also Canals and Tithes.

All property to be rated at the net annual value, 906

Land to be rated according to its improved value, 177

Extra profits to be included in the assessment, id.

As when land is used as a spring, id.

Or reservoir, 178

Or for the water-pipes, 199

Or gas-pipes, 137

Secus a manufactory for its profits, 183

Profits arising from a machine affixed to freehold to be included, 179

And from a billiard table, id.

And from building used as a canteen, id.

Where the expense in one year is greater than the profit, it is rateable if there is a profit communibus annis, 180, 181, 186

The rent a tenant gives or would give is the criterion of the rateable value, 183

But not conclusive, 126

If clearly shown of greater value, 126, 186, 190

If the subject is perishable, the further expense of renewing must be deducted, 190

So also if subject to an extraordinary expense, id.

Or to land tax, id.

Actual rent no conclusive criterion, 186

Annual value part only of rent, 182

The rent at which a coal mine would let is a criterion, without deducting the expense of sinking it, 185

As to incomplete canal, id.

The improved value must be taken, as of the machinery, 188

Whether made by tenant or landlord, id.

In fixing profits of canal, the poor rate, expenses of collection, of repairing locks, and supplying water, must be deducted, 189

Reason of this, id.

RATE—continued.Amount of Rate, &c.—continued.

So also in rating rector for corn rent, the taxes should be deducted, if the land is rated at the rent, 191

No general rule as to proportions, 182

Where some lands are rated according to the rent, in rating others according to the value, the poor rate must be deducted, 184

Unless a rate is apparently unequal King's Bench will not quash it, 182

Unless a local act directs it to be equal, 183

Different rate in house and land not an apparent inequality, id.

Nor two-thirds of net rent of lands and one-half of collieries, 181

8. Form of Rate.

Prescribed by the commissioners, 206

Prescribed by statute, 998

Omission, ground of appeal, 222

The property rated must be specified, 207

Its allowance, id.

Must be recorded in the rate book, id.

Form of, id.

Must be by two justices out of sessions, id.

Or by borough-justices or aldermen, id.

If parish in two counties or liberties, justices to act only within their jurisdiction, 207

But overseers have authority over the whole parish, 208

Not to be altered after allowance, id.

Rate for a borough, part only of a parish, is bad, id.

Unless separately assessed for sixty years before 59 Geo. III. c. 95, id.

Rate for a borough not to be allowed by county justice, id.

The allowance is a ministerial act, 207

And cannot be refused, id.

If refused, mandamus lies, id.

Publication, 206.

Publication of rate must be on the next Sunday after allowance, 208

Or it is a nullity, id.

The notice need not state the allowance, 209

See form of publication, App. 1053

9. Rate, Inspection of.

Inhabitants may inspect the rate, 209

And demand copies, id.

Though time for appeal have elapsed, 214

Penalty for neglect 20*l.*, recoverable by action, by party aggrieved, 209

The demand must be at a reasonable time and place, id.

At the plaintiff's house not reasonable, id.

Near overseer's house reasonable, id.

By the attorney insufficient, id.

Unless the inhabitant is present, 211

The plaintiff must sustain some injury, 210

Loss of right of appeal not essential, 214

Copy given the morning after the demand sufficient, 209

RATE—continued.9. Rate, Inspection of—continued.

Demand of "the rate" sufficient, 211

Referring inhabitant to the vestry is a refusal, id.

An assistant overseer is liable to the penalty, if it is part of his duty to produce the rate, 210

What is evidence thereof, 212

To subject the person to the penalty he must not only have the custody of the book but the care of the poor, 213

Mandamus granted for inspection after time for appeal passed, 213

The grounds for desiring inspection must be stated, 214

Mandamus granted to guardians of poor, 139

10. Rates, Exemption from Payment of, 214

Poor house of incorporated parishes to be assessed at its value, before it was made a poor house, 41

If a local statute exempts the duties from rates, this is an exemption of the land, 172

Land used for a canal may be exempted from greater rates than the adjoining land, 172, 196

Tolls and toll houses of turnpikes are exempted by 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 3, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31...583, 584

Justices in petty sessions, with consent of overseers, may excuse paupers from payment of rates, 214

In such cases the owner cannot be rated, 215

11. Rate, of Remedies against the, 214

A rate cannot be abandoned by overseers, 215, 226

If a local act directs an appeal to the commissioners in the first instance, that course must be pursued, 215

By the local act of St. James's, Westminster, two justices may give relief, 215

By the Norwich Act an appeal is given against the warrant for assessment, 222

By 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 96, justices at petty sessions may hear all appeals against rates, 997

Statutes relating to, 216, 218, 219

Appeal is given to persons aggrieved, or persons having material objection to the insertion or omission of another, 218

Notice of appeal in writing, signed by appellant or attorney, must be left at overseer's abode, 219

The grounds of appeal must be specified, and the sessions can examine into no other, 219

Though an objection appear on the face of the rate, 223

Unless by consent in open court, 219

Omission of property rated is a good ground for appeal, 222

It is no ground of appeal for a stranger

RATE—continued.11. Rate, of Remedies against the—continued. that the tenant and not his dairyman is rated, 128

Same notice must be given to persons interested, 220

Omission fatal to the appeal, 222, 223

Notice to third parties unnecessary, if the ground of appeal is that the appellant is overrated, 223

Notice to corporation sufficient, though burgesses stock the land, Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453

Notice to all inhabitants unnecessary where the ground was rated higher than other inhabitants, 223

The notice need not state the appellant to be party aggrieved, or inhabitant, or that he has material objection, 253, 258

If he has no interest in the rate, the sessions may refuse to hear it, 258

Several persons may join in one notice, 222

One appeal against four rates sufficient, id. Form of notice, App. 1054

The appeal is to the next practicable sessions after allowance, 220

One day intervening between publication and sessions, the appeal may be to the following sessions, id.

The Sudbury Act gives an appeal first to the borough and then to the county sessions, 216

The appeal may be to the adjourned sessions, 221

Justices should induce parties to try the appeal at the next sessions, and not enter and adjourn as of course, id.

If they do adjourn it, they must hear it, id. They may refuse to receive the appeal if no notice is given, id.

When appellant objects to his being rated at all, or to the quantum, it is usual for the respondent to begin and prove probable grounds for the amount charged, 224

But the practice of making the appellant begin, is not so unreasonable that the King's Bench will interfere, 225

The appellant is not bound to furnish means for amending rate, 226

If a borough has not six justices the appeal may be to county sessions, 216

Formerly four, id.

If an adequate number, but some interested, the appeal must be to the borough sessions, 217

Justices may amend the rate, 219

(The King's Bench cannot, 135)

By inserting or striking out names, 219

By altering sums charged, id.

Or in any other manner, id.

Justices may quash it and order a new rate to be made, 219

And the sums charged to be levied, id.

When a rate ought to be amended and not quashed, 227

Rate to be recovered as altered, 230

 A statute creating a place a township, and to maintain its own poor, is prospective only, and a bastard born there before the act cannot be removed to it, 846

2. Of Removal of Wife, 828

- Wife resident with her husband cannot be removed from him without his consent, 829.
Secus, with it, 832
 Such separation will not be presumed, 830
 Removal of a wife, eo nomine, is good, without adjudging place to be husband's settlement, id.
 It will be presumed, 831
 So also if she is removed with her children, not stating her to be married, id.
 Wife of an Irishman who resides with her, could never be removed to her settlement, id.
 Or of a Scotchman, 97
Secus, if the husband deserts her, 99, 832
 Wife of a person without a settlement may, by consent of her husband, be without him removed to her settlement, 832
 Wife deserted is irremovable from her husband's estate, 828
 And from his leasehold tenement, id.
 And her own estate, id.
 Wife of a convict resident on an estate in which she had a joint interest is not removable, 829

REMOVAL—*continued.*2. Of Removal of Wife—continued.

Nor on land demised to her and her husband for life, 829

Though the husband destroyed the lease, and the parties were ejected, id.

Married woman pregnant with a bastard, and husband abroad, is removable under 35 Geo. III. 832

A married woman cannot be removed to her maiden settlement if her husband has a settlement, but in what parish unknown, 834

3. Of Children, 835

Nurse children may be removed to the settlement of the parents, though the order does not state parent's death, 835

A nurse child is irremovable from mother, whether child is legitimate or not, 836

4. Of Servants, 837

A servant cannot be removed during service, id.

Though pregnant with a bastard, id.

But if she is discharged for bastardy, she may then be removed, 838

5. Of Pregnant Women under 38 Geo. III. c. 101

Of servants, 838

An unmarried woman with child is not necessarily chargeable, the justices must adjudge her to be so, 839

But order stating that, being pregnant, she was deemed chargeable, is good, id.

A certificate does not prevent her removal, id.

Not a sufficient chargeability under 59 Geo. III. c. 12...99

Not repealed, it seems, by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, 824, n.

6. Of Casual Poor, 840

A person meeting with an accident in a parish, is not removable, 88 to 100

But a person going backwards and forwards from parish to parish for relief, is removable, 840

7. Of Poor born in Scotland, Ireland, Isles of Man, Jersey, and Guernsey.

Husbandman not a trade within the statute, id.

Persons contemplated—officers, mariners, soldiers, marines, married militia-men, having served five years, and the like in the fencibles, id.

Provisions now unavailable, id.

10. Woolcombers not removable, id.

III. The Order of Removal—Suspension and Execution, 8451. From whence Removal made.

Not from or to an extra-parochial place without overseers, 845

Nor to a parish, which has no overseers distinct from those of the township, 846

The respondent must show that the place has overseers, 847

Overseers should first be appointed, 845, 849

Cannot be to a place ceasing to be a township, 845, 846

It may be to a place created a township, 845

To a village, part of a parish, is a nullity, 853

Adjudging the settlement to be in a hamlet in the parish, sufficient, 845

Removal to a township, as a parish, is cured by not appealing, 846, 853

Though the township is of the same name as the parish, 849

Order directed to the parish and pauper delivered to the overseer of a township, id.

Removal to parish of P. or town and county of P., sufficient, there being only one parish in the county, 853

Omission of the name of the tutelary saint immaterial, id.

Insufficient description cured by appeal, id.

2. Complaint, 853

Complaint of the overseer of the poor, is the foundation of justices' jurisdiction, id.

It must be so stated in the order, id.

Those complained of only are removable, 864

3. Of the Justices—their Style and Jurisdiction.

The churchwarden cannot be one of the removing justices, 854

Their authority must appear, id.

One justice may receive complaint, id.

But both must be present at the examination, 855

REMOVAL—continued.

III. The Order of Removal—Suspension and Execution—continued.

Order by two justices, but signed separately, voidable only on appeal, 855, 858
 The justices who examine must remove, 855
 They must be "of the peace," id.
 "In the county" bad, id.
 "Of the town or borough and parish," sufficient, id.
 Statute directory only as to their being of the division, 856
 "Of the said county," refers to county last mentioned, 532, 856
 No order invalid for omission of the words "of the quorum," 857 Sessions may examine into the jurisdiction, id.
 The justices may supersede their own order, 881

4. The Hearing and the Examination, 858

Statute directs it to be on oath, id.
 "Due examination," "due consideration" implies it, id.
 Power of one justice to take examination where pauper infirm, 859
 Special fact need not be recited in the order, id.
 The examination is not evidence, though the pauper cannot be found, id.
 Nor hearsay statement of a dead pauper, id.
 It is fit, but not necessary, that the pauper should be examined, 862, 871
 Pauper refusing to be examined, may be committed till he answers, 863
 Soldier, or militia-man, with wife or child, may be examined where he is billeted, as to his settlement, 860
 Attested copy of examination to be given to the soldier, to be delivered to the commanding officer, id.
 Attested copy, and no other copy, is admissible in evidence, id.
 The original examination is admissible, id.
 Signature of justices must be proved, 861
 Admissible, the soldier absent or dead, id.
 It is not admissible, unless on the face of it it appears that the soldier was billeted within the justices' jurisdiction, id.
 Whether it must be proved aliunde? 862
 Same provisions as to persons in prison, or house of correction, or in custody of peace officer, 863
 Summons of parties for examination, 858

5. Form of Order of Removal.

Form of, App. 1099

1. County and Date, 863

County in margin, without reference to it, is not sufficient, id.
 Distinction between orders and indictments, 864

2. Description of Paupers, id.

Must be described by name, id.
 If unknown, as "person unknown," id.
 Can remove those only complained of, id.

REMOVAL—continued.

III. The Order of Removal—Suspension and Execution—continued.

A man "and his family," bad, 864
 Age of children must be stated when they are removed as part of the father's family, id.
 If child above seven, the order must adjudge the place to be child's settlement, or that he has gained none in his own right, 865 Different persons cannot be removed by same order upon independent settlements, id.
 "Endeavour" to intrude, bad, id.

3. Chargeability.

There must be an adjudication of chargeability to the complaining parish, 866
Semble, also of a complaint by the same, id.
 But a complaint that a single woman pregnant had come, &c. is insufficient, 834

4. Adjudication, 866

Of actual chargeability essential, 867
 Order to be removed to a place as his settlement, without adjudging it to be so, is bad, id.
 "We believe," or "are credibly informed," or "according to our knowledge," insufficient, id.
 The "last legal place" is no adjudication of settlement, id.
 "Legal" and "last legal settlement," are synonymous, id.
 "Having adjudged," sufficient upon appeal, for that recognizes it as an order, id.
 "Hath adjudged" sufficient, though it varied from the prescribed form, 868

5. To whom directed, 870

The order must be to one parish to remove, and the other to receive, id.
 If to both to receive and remove, it is bad, id.
 Direction to parish or township, semble, good, id.
 The word "churchwarden" may be omitted, id.

6. Time and Manner of serving the Order.

Service of an order one year after it was made, sufficient, the circumstances of the pauper not being altered in the interval, id.
 If a suspended order, three years after, too late, id.
 The order itself must be delivered, or a copy and the original produced at the same time, id.
 Not necessarily by the overseer himself, 871
 No pauper removable till twenty-one days after service of a copy of the order and examination, 870

REMOVAL—continued.

III. *The Order of Removal—Suspension and Execution—continued.*7. Of suspending Removal, 871

Statutes relating to, 824

Removal of sick or infirm persons may be suspended, 871

Suspension and permission to remove, to be indorsed, *id.*Sufficient if the case, though not the pauper, be brought before the justices, *id.*Expenses of the interval to be paid by the parish to which the order is directed, id.

No charges to be paid, unless the order and examination be served within ten days, 873

Expenses to be paid only where the pauper is removed or dies, 872

And not where he in the interval succeeded to an estate, and became irremovable, *id.*Appeal if costs exceeds 20*l.*, 871May be suspended where the husband, wife, or child, is too ill, *id.*Vagrant's order may be suspended, 824
So also of debtors confined on mesne process, 70

Removal without the suspension being taken off, the order cannot be quashed, 873

A suspended order of removal must be served within a reasonable time, *id.*A delay of three years unreasonable, id.

The order however is voidable only on appeal, 874

Such appeal must be to the next sessions after the good service of the order, 825, 874, 876

Power to distrain for the expenses, 823

Justices of a different jurisdiction must indorse a warrant of distress for the expenses, 824

And they cannot refuse, 875

An appeal may be made after the time elapsed for taking a distress, *id.*Appeal is given, though no removal takes place, and the costs are under 20*l.*, 8768. Orders of Removals unappealed against, may be filed at the Sessions, 8779. Penalty for disobeying Order, Indictment lies for not obeying the order, 878IV. Returning after, 878By 13 & 14 Car. II. s. 12, persons returning after removal were punishable as vagabonds, *id.*Has 35 Geo. III. not altered this? *id.*Persons returning must be charged upon oath, id.

Commitment must be for a definite period, 879

Till discharged "by due course of law," bad, id.

REMOVAL—continued.

IV. Returning after—continued.

The commitment must state the place to which he returned, 879

Returning to a tenement, not in a state of vagrancy, is no offence, 880

A conviction for returning without a certificate, is a sufficient defence to an action, 880

Unnecessary to state specific act of vagrancy, *id.*V. Form of Order of Removal of Certificated Person, 880

Overseers to be reimbursed for conveying certificated persons, 881

VI. Appeal against Order of Removal, *id.*1. Statutes relating to, *id.*2. Who may Appeal, *id.*All persons aggrieved, id.

The inhabitants, 849, 883

The appeal to be to the sessions of the county in which the parish removing doth lie, 882

The pauper may appeal, id.

A township may appeal against an order directed to a parish, 849, 850, 882

Appeal against an order of a borough must be to the county sessions, 883

Secus, where borough justices authorized to do all acts that may be done by quarter sessions, *id.*3. To what Sessions, 884

To the next practicable sessions after the removal, 885, 886, 887

May be to the sessions after the service of the order, and before the removal, 884

If the removal is made too late to give notice of trial for the next sessions, the appeal need not be entered and respited, 886

An adjourned sessions, where appeals may be lodged, not in contemplation of statute, 887

Where appeal is not entered at the next, and parties agreed to abide by an opinion, mandamus refused to enter at the following sessions, 884

Not necessary to give notice within the twenty-one days after service of the order, 891

4. Entering Appeal, &c., 888Discretionary to enter appeal against an order, abandoned, *id.*Entered, if necessary, to compel the payment of the maintenance, *id.*Sessions not bound to enter and respite, where notice given, *id.*5. Of Adjournment, 889An appeal may be adjourned, *id.*Where the justices are equally divided, an adjournment should be entered, *id.*If they quash the order, K. B. will not interfere, id.

REMOVAL—continued.

VI. *Appeal against Order—continued.*5. Of Adjournments—continued.

Record of trial at an adjourned, should show the commencement of the original sessions, 889

Four sessions only can be held in a year, 890

If "more need be," they must be adjournments, id.

If session once dropped, it cannot be resumed, 889

Confirmation of an order without appeal is coram non judice, 890

6. Notice of Appeal, 890

A statement of the grounds of appeal must be given fourteen days before the sessions, id.

That the pauper was settled in the removing parish, is sufficient, 892

Reasonable notice required by former statutes, 890

The reasonableness to be determined by the sessions, 894

But K. B. has a visitatorial power to correct it, 894, 895, 896

Not affected by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 76, 891, 892

This applies only to the first sessions, 895

Appeal must be entered and adjourned, if no notice given, 893

No notice of trial required, where respondents procure the respite, 896

Nor where proper notice has been given, and the appeal was adjourned after hearing both parties, 897

Where there has been reasonable time, and no notice given, the sessions ought not to enter it, 894

But if they enter it and adjourn, they cannot refuse to hear it, id.

Form of. See App. 1104

Where sessions required fourteen days' notice of a respited appeal, which was not given, and appeal dismissed, K. B. will not interfere, though the attorney was ignorant of the practice, 895

VII. Effect of an Order unappealed against, 9001. How far final, id.

Order unappealed from is conclusive, id.

Unless made to a place not maintaining its poor, id.

So also where the removal is to a township, which is a parish, 848, 902

Though the parish and township are of the same name, 849

And the pauper delivered to the township, id.

Order directed to the parish, and delivery to the overseer of the township, id.

The township is not concluded, when the removal is to the parish, 902

The paupers cannot be sent back except by another order, 900

VII. *Effect of Order—continued.*1. How far Final—continued.

If justices have no jurisdiction, order is void, 900

This is substance, not form, id.

Voidable only on appeal, where justices act apart, 855

Order may be abandoned without appeal, 881, 901

A fresh order may be made to another parish, 902

2. Of what Facts conclusive, 904

Removal "of a man and his wife," conclusive as to the marriage, 904, 906

Or of a woman as a wife, 904

And in all derivative settlements, 905, 906

Quære, if the pauper appeals, 907

It is not conclusive as to a son not removed with his parents, id.

Unless the son claims a derivative settlement, 905

Removal of "a widow" is conclusive as to her and her husband's settlement, id.

It is not conclusive as to any point collateral to the point decided, 907, 908

Settlement of a father determined on an appeal against a removal of a son, is not evidence upon the removal of another son, 907

The order is conclusive of the settlement only up to its date, 909

It is conclusive against all the world, id.

It is in effect a statutable certificate, id.

VIII. Effect of confirming or quashing Order upon Appeal, 909

Order confirmed or reversed upon appeal is a judgment in law, 907, 908

And is receivable in evidence, id.

Order quashed is conclusive between the litigant parishes, 910

But only between them, 909, 910

If quashed for form, not conclusive as between them, 911

Parol evidence admissible to explain the ground of quashing, id.

Order quashed because pauper not removable, is not conclusive between the litigant parties, 912

IX. Of Amendments, 916

Sessions may rectify defects of form, 916

But not omission of complaint, id.

Or adjudication of chargeability, id.

Or jurisdiction of justice, 201

"Parish" may be altered to "vill," 916

"Township" may be altered to "parish," 853, 917

Nothing presumed to vitiate the order, 830, 911, n.

X. Power of Sessions on Orders of Removal, 9171. Judgment of Sessions, id.

Order quashed for informality; this may be an informality not on the face of the order, 915

REMOVAL—continued.

X. Power of Sessions—continued.

1. Judgment of Sessions—continued.

Cannot make an original order, 917

Must quash or affirm, id.

Justices interested as rate-payers, or having made the order, cannot vote, id.

Judgment quashing order, and removing the pauper back, is good in part, 918

When justices are divided, the appeal should be adjourned, id.

But if, when justices are divided, the order is quashed, K. B. will not interfere, 918

Nor will K. B. interfere, if judgment is entered by mistake or by miscalculation of votes, 919

Or by the interference of an interested justice, id.

K. B. will not inquire, by affidavit, into the validity of the judgment of the sessions, 915

Sessions may confirm an order quashed at the same sessions, but not of a preceding sessions, 918

2. Special Cases. See CASE.

Should be drawn by counsel, 920, n.

Generally refused when justices unanimous, id.

Stating a case for K. B., substituted for reference to judge on circuit, 920

Not compellable to grant them, id.

Or state the reasons of their judgment, 921

Should refuse it, where they have no doubt, 920

The sessions should find the facts, and not the evidence, 922

Should find the meaning of local terms, id.

How K. B. will deal with special cases, id.

Bill of exceptions does not lie, 921

On a case sent back, must re-hear the whole, 923

But where sessions refused to re-examine pauper, K. B. confirmed it, id.

Form of, App. 1111

3. Of Costs and Maintenance, 926

Upon appeal against a settlement, reasonable costs may be awarded to the party in whose behalf it is determined, id.

Or against a party making frivolous statement, id.

So also after notice of appeal not prosecuted, id.

If the party liable lives out of the county, one justice may issue warrant of distress, id.

In default thereof, may commit for twenty days, id.

Allowance of costs is discretionary, 927

None can be awarded on an adjournment, id.

If sessions determine in favour of appellant, they must order repayment of all reasonable relief from the time of notice of chargeability, 926

Mandamus lies to enforce, id.

X. Power of Sessions—continued.

3. Costs, &c.—continued.

An appeal may be entered after order suspended, or give justices power to order maintenance, 927

May give costs, when order quashed for informality, id.

TAXES OR LEVIES. (*Settlement by paying,
&c., public.*)

Being charged with and paying public taxes of the parish, gave a settlement by 3 Will. III.
c. 11.. 759

It must have been in respect of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* by 35 Geo. III. c.
101.. id.

And such tenement, since 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, must be rented and occupied according to that statute, id.

This settlement is not affected by 59 Geo. III.
c. 50.. id.

1. Statutes relating to, 759

2. Effect of 35 Geo. III. c. 101.. 759

Did not entirely abolish this head of settlement, 760

Servant of the king might thereby gain it,
id.

Revived in effect by 59 Geo. III.. 759, 761

But extinguished again by 6 Geo. IV... id.

The amount of rate immaterial, if annual value is 10*l.*, 762

3. Of Inhabitancy, 764

The residence must be in the parish in which he is rated, id.

The party must reside forty days after being charged, and having paid, 759, n.

And before 6 Geo. IV., id., id.

4. What are Parochial Taxes, 764

Not confined to parochial taxes, id.

A tax for a ward is not sufficient, 766

Nor for county rate, 767

Scavenger and highway rates excepted by statute, id.

TAXES OR LEVIES—*continued.*4. What are Parochial Taxes—continued.

Land tax, since the redemption acts, within the statute, 764, 766

Land tax included in "parochial rates," 6 Geo. IV...764

A church rate is, 767

Not the assessed taxes, 759

5. The person must be charged and pay, 767

Charged by an informal or void rate is sufficient, 767

Secus, if name inserted after payment, id.

Omission of sum assessed immaterial, 768

Person paying must be the person rated, id.

Repayment does not destroy the settlement, 768

There must be such a rating and paying as to show that the parish had notice, 769

Rated as occupier, sufficient, id.

Or by name of the tenement, id.

So also if there be a description sufficient to charge the tenant, 769

If it is not on the tenant by name, it must be notorious that the tenant is charged, 769

If the names of landlord and tenant are both inserted, who is rated may be inferred from circumstances, 770

The rate must be produced, 771

Payment by another may be equivalent to payment by person charged, id.

It is sufficient, though landlord refund it, id.

Or the collector to a tide waiter, 771, 767

Payment by superior officer, and no deduction from salary, not sufficient, 768

It is not necessary that the person charged should occupy as tenant, 767

TAXING IN AID.

Statute relating to, 235

Another place may be rated in aid of a parish not able to levy sufficient rates, id.

If any place sufficient, it must be in the hundred, if not in the county, id.

If the place is in the hundred, the rate must be made by justices, not in sessions, 235, 236, 237

If not in the hundred, but in the county, by the sessions, 235

The sessions may rate, though two justices have found that the parishes within the hundred are not able, 237

A vill is within the equity of the statute, 235

The rate must be made by the justices, and not by the parish officers, 236

It may be made on particular persons only id.

Or upon an extra-parochial place, id.

A parish incorporated with the poor parish may be rated in aid, id.

The place rated must not be within the poor parish, and this should appear in the order, id.

Difference of name imports difference of place, id.

The order must state that the parish rated is within the hundred, 236

Or within a liberty, which is substantially an hundred, 237

The parish rated must be within the justices' jurisdiction, id.

The order must be for a time limited, id.

It may be for a year, id.

And for a sum in gross, id.

At 6*d.* in the pound, is bad, id.

Mandamus granted to make it, 236

TENEMENT, Settlement by renting.

Division of subject, 580

1. Statutes relating to, 581—585

A settlement under 13 & 14 Car. II. must be complete before 59 Geo. III...585

The repeal of 59 Geo. III. did not revive the 13 & 14 Car. II...587

A taking made before 6 Geo. IV., and consistent with it, is sufficient, 586

Secus, where the occupation was inconsistent with 59 Geo. III...586

2. What is a Tenement under 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12.

An incorporeal hereditament is, 587

A coney-warren, 587, 593

A fishery, 587

Exclusive right of taking soil, 588

A cattle-gate, id.

Right of common in gross, 596

Water or wind-mill are tenements, 589

It is doubtful whether the tolls must be granted by deed, 591, n.

Tolls of a bridge are a tenement, though by statute they are personal property, 592

But no settlement can be gained by renting tolls of roads, or of navigation or toll-house, 583

But he might rent land, and gain a settlement, by residing in the toll-house, under 13 Geo. III. c. 84...591

Renting a toll-house worth more than 10*l.* a year, independent of the tolls, will not confer a settlement, 592

Tolls collected in streets of Durham are within the statute, id.

But the tolls of a bridge are not, id.

The prohibition as to tolls of navigation is not repealed by general turnpike act, 592, 593

The liberty to take profits of land by the mouths of cattle, is a tenement, 599

If a man grants the profits, he grants the land, 589

Semble, taking a pasture is not a tenement, id.

Taking hay, grass, and aftermath, is, id.

So also two ponds, or the rushes growing therein, id.

So also the fogg or aftergrass, 590

So also taking land for particular purpose, as setting potatoes, id.

So also renting cows to be fed exclusively on certain lands, 594

TENEMENT—*continued.*2. What is a Tenement, &c.—continued.

But the land must be of annual value of 10*l.*. 595

If the renter has not the exclusive right of pasturage, it is not a tenement, 596

A contract by the master to feed the cows generally, is not a tenement, id.

The privilege of milking cows to be depastured on owner's farm is a tenement, 596, 603

But the person must be tenant, or occupier, 603

So also for a pasture-fed cow for the season, 597

It is not a tenement, unless it is part of the contract that the cattle should be pasture-fed, 598, 600, 603

A contract "for 21 ewes going," does not imply pasture-fed, 601

If the sessions so find it, it is sufficient, 601

Pointing places to a mill not fixed in the floor, are not a tenement, 604

And Rex v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161, Add. 950

Nor runners screwed to the floor, 605

Nor standing place for carding machine, id.

A butcher's stall, which was a permanent building, and had a door to it, is, id.

Licence to use machinery not, 605, 621

3. What a Tenement under 59 Geo. III., 6 Geo. IV., and 1 Will. IV.

These statutes are the same in this respect, 606

It must consist of a dwelling-house or building, or land, or of both, id.

Whether house and tolls taken at an entire rent are within these statutes? id.

The tenement may be two distinct houses, 606, 608, 609

Any two of the things sufficient, 607

4. The Tenement need not be entire under any of the Statutes, 610

Tenements taken of different persons, and at different times, sufficient, under 13 & 14 Car. II... 606, 610

So also under 59 Geo. III. c. 50... 611

5. Nature and Necessity of a Tenancy, 611

"Coming to settle," means by renting or holding as tenant, 614; but see 612

Not a permanent settlement, 613

Taking a tenement on trial, will do, 612

The relation of landlord and tenant must subsist, 621

Mere licence is not enough, 604

A purchase of growing oats does not make pauper a tenant, 614

A servant may be a tenant, where the occupation is not an appendage to his service, 614, 619

Secus, where it is necessary for the performance of his service, 617, 618; see 601

Taking the profits of a pasture-fed cow, in consideration of maintaining owner's servant, is a tenancy, 616

A pauper residing in a cottage to take care of a garden, and have part of its profits, is not tenant of the garden, 617

Residence in a house belonging to the Ordinance, which pauper quits when he leaves that service, is not a tenancy, 618

Residence by a licensed curate in the rectory, is sufficient, 611

A schoolmaster residing in a house rent free, and removable at pleasure, and underletting part, is a tenant, and not servant, 631

Credit need not be given to the pauper, if he is the tenant, 621, 622

The whole 10*l.* must be taken as a tenancy, and cannot be coupled with a freehold, 622, 623

The pauper may be removed before his tenancy begins, 627

Putting goods in, is not a sufficient commencement of tenancy, id.

No difference between this and the certificate act, 621

6. Joint Tenants, 623

Renting jointly a tenement which will produce 10*l.* a year to each tenant, gives a settlement, 623, 625, 655

Though the tenants take at different periods, 624

And though one underlet to the other, id.

So also renting an entire tenement, and jointly part of another, 625

If the premises are demised to two, they must be worth 20*l.*, though one joined as a surety, id.

Renting a tenement for 11*l.*, and allowing another jointly to occupy it, sufficient under the statute of Charles, 654

7. Permissive Occupation is a "coming to settle," 626

An express contract unnecessary,—residence by landlord's permission sufficient, 628

Or by that of prior tenant, 629

A tenancy at will is sufficient, 626. See 604.

A deserter concealing himself in a house taken by his wife, does not "come to settle," 627

Living in a tenement given out of charity is sufficient, 626, 629

So also a schoolmaster residing in a house rent free and removable at pleasure, 631

Renting a tenement in one parish, and living rent free in another, did confer a settlement in the latter, 630

8. Duration of Contract under 13 & 14 Car. II.

Renting for a year first made necessary by 59 Geo. III... 682

Taking for eight or five months, sufficient, id.

Contract is not determined by removal of pauper, 633

9. Since 59 Geo. III. a Tenement must be hired for a year.

By "one whole year" is meant what is in law a tenancy for a year, 633

TENEMENT—continued.

9. Since 59 Geo. III., &c.—continued.

A tenancy determinable on notice is sufficient, 633

The taking may be of a tenant from year to year, 634

A general hiring of land is a hiring for a year, id.

10. The Tenement must be bonâ fide rented since 59 Geo. III.

It must be bonâ fide as between landlord and tenant, and fraud by the parish does not signify, 635

If the pauper hires the tenement, the intervention of a surety cannot affect the settlement, id.

11. The Value under 13 & 14 Car. II.

The value being 10*l.* has always been the same, 636

For joint tenants, ante, and 623

The rent is evidence of value, but a value greater than rent may be proved, 636, 640

The principle is, that the party has sufficient credit to take a tenement of 10*l.* a year, 587, 641

The value to be taken at the time the party comes to settle, however it became of that value, 637, 638, 642

Therefore the value of improvement made after the taking and before the entry, may be included, 638

So also if the improvement is made after the entry, but in consequence of a previous contract, 640

But improvements agreed for, but never made, cannot form part of the value, though the rent is given in contemplation of them, 636

When tenancy from year to year, the value of any year may be taken, 640

Secus if it is a lease for years, id.

Stock on a tenement cannot be included, 636

Nor a chattel, unless itself a tenement, 641; and Rex v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161, App.

But fixtures, parcel of the freehold, may be, 641

Value arising from landlord paying taxes may be included, 642

A tenement worth less than 10*l.* when let by the year, but more when let weekly, is not sufficient, 643

A case stated the taking of a furnished room, but not the value of furniture, and K. B. held it a tenement, 641

12. Value under 59 Geo. III. &c.

It must be bonâ fide RENTED for 10*l.* a year, 643

The actual value material only as evidence of a bonâ fide hiring, 644

Rent of 10*l.*, the landlord paying rates, is sufficient, 644

Where the premises rented lie in two parishes, evidence is admissible that the value of the part in one parish was 10*l.*, 645

VOL. IV.

TENEMENT—continued.

13. Rent must be paid under 59 Geo. III. &c.

The whole rent, whatever its amount, must be paid by the person hiring the same, under 59 Geo. III... 646

The 6 Geo. IV. does not require the person hiring to pay, id.

The 1 Will. IV. requires that the rent should be paid by the person hiring, 646

And is prospective only, 647

But payment to the amount of 10*l.* sufficient, 646

This clause is retrospective, id.

Payment by distress, it seems, is sufficient, 651

Where the tenant died after the year expired, and the rent was paid afterwards, no settlement was gained, 653

Rent paid by churchwarden under 6 Geo. IV. is sufficient, id.

Secus if fraudulent, 654

Payment of a full rent for a year, but not the year of the hiring, sufficient, 654, 658

If the rent is paid after an order of removal made, it cannot be quashed, 648

Although the pauper then gains a settlement, 649

14. Occupation under 13 & 14 Car. II.

Part of the premises may be let to an under-tenant, 654

Renting a tenement for 11*l.* a year, and occupying it jointly with another person, gives the original tenant a settlement, 655

15. Occupation under 59 Geo. III., 6 Geo. IV., and 1 Will. IV.

The house must be held, and land occupied by the person hiring under 59 Geo. III., 655

House, building, and land must be occupied under 6 Geo. IV... 656

They must be actually occupied under 1 Will. IV., id.

An occupation defective according to 59 Geo. III., but inconsistent with 6 Geo. IV., is not rendered available by the passing of the latter statute, 586

It must be occupied for a year, and where tenant died three days before year expired, and his family remained the whole year, the occupation is incomplete, 656

A pauper who underlets part of his house, holds within 59 Geo. III... 656, 657

But under this statute, if he underlets the land, no settlement is acquired, 659

So also where pauper abandoned the house, and another occupied it, by whose leave it did not appear, 660

Occupation of part of a house by tenant, and part by his lodger, satisfies 6 Geo. IV., 660

And if the LAND is underlet, the occupation is sufficient, 663

The occupation and payment need not be for the same year, under 59 Geo. III., 658

Renting a cottage and land at an entire rent,

4 H

TENEMENT—continued.

15. Occupation, &c.—continued.
the cottage from Lady-day and the land from May-day, is sufficient, 656
Under 1 Will. IV. the premises must be actually occupied by the person hiring, 664
A tenant underletting any part acquires no settlement, 664, 666
The statute applies to occupation incomplete at the time it was passed, 666
An innkeeper receiving guests, does it seem actually occupy, 666, 668
Occupation not interrupted by the tenant being removed by an order, his family returning the same day, 668
The overseer telling pauper, during the year, to hold from thence of him, is no interruption of the occupation, 668
16. The whole Tenement need not be in one Parish, under 13 & 14 Car. II.
The tenement may be in different parishes, 669
And taken at different times, id.
17. In what Parish, under 59 Geo. III. &c.
The whole tenement must be in one parish, under these statutes, 670
18. Who may acquire this Settlement.
A foreigner may, 670
Also a soldier on duty, living in barracks, id.
Also a certificated person, id.
A deserter cannot, by means of a tenement taken by his wife, 273
Nor any person by reason of renting tolls of turnpike or navigation, 583
But he may by renting another tenement in the same parish, 591
19. Residence under 13 & 14 Car. II.
A residence of forty days in the parish where a part of the tenement lies is necessary, 671, 673
But not on the tenement, 674
Forcible removal within forty days prevents settlement, 671
Though tenant's family continue seven weeks, id. 672
In case of fraud it might be otherwise, 672
Absence on business, but family continuing, would not be an interruption, it seems, of the residence, id.
Imprisonment in the parish where the tenement is, is sufficient, 673. But see 583
Residence as a wife cannot connect with residence as a widow, 673
If the tenement is in different parishes, the settlement is where the tenant sleeps, 675
If the residence during last forty days is in different parishes, the settlement is where he resided the last night, id.
The forty days' residence must be complete before 59 Geo. III. to give settlement, 585
Access to a stall for two days in a week, for nineteen weeks, is not sufficient, 671

TENEMENT—continued.

20. Residence under 59 Geo. III., 675
Residence for forty days sufficient, as before, 676
Must be within the year of occupation, 649
21. The Tenant must be rated under 1 Will. IV. 677
22. Evidence relating to.
Value of cannot be proved by parol evidence of an unstamped agreement, 677
Fact of tenancy, as regards 13 & 14 Car. II., may be proved by payment of rent, without producing the written instrument under which tenant holds, 677
Secus, under 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. Rex v. Merthyr Tydvil, 1 B. & Ad. 29
Presumption of tenancy cannot be rebutted without producing written agreement for occupation, 678
General taking of, is a taking for a year, 634 23. Fraud.
If the renting is colourable, no settlement is gained, 678
Taking land without stock found to be fraudulent, id.
King's Bench will not infer it, 679
Rent paid by overseers to procure a settlement is fraud, id.
Paid as relief, it is not, id.
